

Council on General Affairs and Policy of the Conference – March 2018

Document	Preliminary Document <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Information Document <input type="checkbox"/>	No 4 of February 2018
Title	Accompanying note to the “Draft Practical Guide to Family Agreements under the Hague Conventions”
Author	Permanent Bureau
Agenda item	Item III.4
Mandate(s)	C&R No 18 of the 2016 Council on General Affairs and Policy C&R No 11 of the 2017 Council on General Affairs and Policy
Objective	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>- To report on the 3rd meeting of the Experts’ Group on cross-border recognition and enforcement of agreements reached in the course of family matters involving children;</li> <li>- To inform Council of the discussions held during the Seventh meeting of the Special Commission on the practical operation of the 1980 and 1996 Hague Conventions in relation to the Project;</li> <li>- To invite Council to make a decision on a 4th meeting of the Experts’ Group on cross-border recognition and enforcement of agreements reached in the course of family matters involving children;</li> <li>- To share with Council a provisional version of the Draft Practical Guide to Family Agreements under the Hague Conventions</li> </ul>
Action to be taken	For Approval <input type="checkbox"/> For Decision <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> For Information <input checked="" type="checkbox"/>
Annexes	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>- Draft Practical Guide to Family Agreements under the Hague Conventions (track-change version)</li> <li>- Flowcharts</li> </ul>
Related documents	n.a.

1. At its 2016 meeting, the Council on General Affairs and Policy of the Hague Conference (Council) tasked the Permanent Bureau (PB), in consultation with members of the Experts' Group on cross-border recognition and enforcement of agreements reached in the course of family matters involving children (Experts' Group), "to develop a non-binding 'navigation tool' to provide best practices on how an agreement made in the area of family law involving children can be recognised and enforced in a foreign State under the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Hague Conventions".<sup>1</sup>

2. From 14 to 16 June 2017, further to the recommendation made by Council at its 2017 meeting,<sup>2</sup> the Experts' Group met in The Hague for the third time to discuss a Draft "Practical Guide to Family Agreements under the Hague Conventions" (Draft Practical Guide).

3. The Draft Practical Guide attached to this Note is a track-change version of the document discussed at the last meeting of the Experts' Group and integrating comments received during the course of the meeting. Please note that the attached flowcharts will be integrated in the Draft Practical Guide upon its finalisation (see the placeholders in the document). Please finally note that the members of the Experts' Group have been asked to provide comments (by the end of February 2018) and that these comments will be integrated with a view to finalising the Draft Practical Guide after the 2018 meeting of the Council.

4. The discussions of the Experts' Group at its third meeting highlighted that, while the existing Hague Family Conventions do facilitate to a certain extent the cross-border recognition and enforcement of these agreements, they do not address the specific issue of "package agreements" nor provide a simple, certain, efficient means for their recognition and enforcement abroad. The Experts' Group recognised that very often the matters covered require the simultaneous application of more than one Hague Family Convention while some elements of those package agreements are not within the scope of any of the existing Hague Family Conventions, which creates difficulties for the enforcement of package agreements abroad.

5. Against this background, the Experts' Group proposed three Conclusions and Recommendations for the attention of the Seventh Meeting of the Special Commission to review the practical operation of the 1980 Child Abduction<sup>3</sup> and 1996 Child Protection<sup>4</sup> Conventions (2017 Special Commission) and which underlie the approach taken in the Draft Practical Guide.

6. The proposed Conclusions and Recommendations read as follows:

"(1) Competent authorities in the State of habitual residence of the child, when a Hague 1980 Convention child abduction case is pending in another Contracting State, should be ready to swiftly give force of law to a family agreement between the parties after taking due account of the best interests of the child.

(2) Where the parties make a family agreement which includes the non-return of a child in a Hague 1980 Convention case, the competent authorities in the State of habitual residence of the child should react swiftly, and in principle favourably, to a request under the 1996 Convention for a transfer of jurisdiction to the competent authorities in the place where the child is present.

---

<sup>1</sup> See "Conclusions & Recommendations of the Council on General Affairs and Policy (15-17 March 2016)", C&R No 17, available on the HCCH website at < www.hcch.net > under "Governance" then "Council on General Affairs and Policy".

<sup>2</sup> See "Conclusion & Recommendation of the Council on General Affairs and Policy (14-16 March 2017)", available on the HCCH website at < www.hcch.net > (see path in note 1).

<sup>3</sup> Hague Convention of 25 October 1980 on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction (1980 Child Abduction Convention / 1980 Convention).

<sup>4</sup> Hague Convention of 19 October 1996 on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition, Enforcement and Co-operation in Respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of Children (1996 Child Protection Convention / 1996 Convention).

(3) Costs associated with measures of protection such as contact / visiting expenses do fall within the scope of the 1996 Convention and / or the 2007 Convention.”

7. Of the three Conclusions and Recommendations, the 2017 Special Commission only adopted a revised version of Conclusion and Recommendation No 3.<sup>5</sup>

8. Moreover, the comments made by experts at the meeting (mostly from States Parties both to the 1980 and 1996 Conventions) revealed a notable divergence in determining the moment when the habitual residence of the child shifts in the case of a non-return agreement following an application for return under the 1980 Child Abduction Convention.

9. Some States expressed the view that the agreement reached by the parties not to return a child in a 1980 Convention case would bear the consequence that the habitual residence of the child immediately shifts to the requested State (i.e., the State where the child is present). Other States expressed reservations with regard to this interpretation and noted that the agreement not to return the child, while it would inevitably influence the determination of the child’s habitual residence, could not be regarded as the decisive element for the purposes of determining the child’s habitual residence.

10. Depending on which one of these approaches is taken, the best practices that ought to be suggested to ensure that the agreement could be recognised and enforced may greatly differ.

11. If it is assumed that the agreement reached by the parties not to return the child would not in itself mean that the habitual residence of the child shifts to the State of refuge, it may be good practice to take the agreement to the competent authorities of the State of habitual residence of the child and to convert it into a “measure of protection” and thus have it benefit from the provisions of the 1996 Child Protection Convention. This approach is the one currently reflected in the Draft Practical Guide.<sup>6</sup>

12. Conversely, if it is assumed that the habitual residence of the child automatically shifts with the agreement of the parties not to return the child, a direct consequence may be that the authorities in the State of refuge would have jurisdiction to decide on the merits of custody once they have decided to end the return proceedings. In accordance with Article 5(2) of the 1996 Convention, the authorities in the State of refuge, now being the State of habitual residence of the child, would have jurisdiction to render an agreement on the merits of custody binding.

13. However, because there exists a disparity of views across States on this issue, it may be the case that this last approach would not be followed by the authorities in the State of the former habitual residence of the child (i.e., the State where the child was habitually resident immediately before the removal or the retention). If the authorities in that State were to take the view that they retained jurisdiction to decide on the merits of custody for the child – in spite of the agreement reached by the parties not to return the child – a consequence may be that the agreement would not be recognised and enforced in that State.

14. In light of the above developments, and further to a suggestion made by the Chair,<sup>7</sup> the PB consulted the members of the Experts’ Group on the possibility to convene a fourth meeting of the Experts’ Group in late 2018. The great majority of responses (10 out of 11) received by the PB were in favour of convening a fourth meeting of the Experts’ Group.

---

<sup>5</sup> “The Special Commission takes note of the finding of the Experts’ Group that, depending on the individual circumstances of the case, the applicable law or the wording of the agreement or decision, the travel expenses associated with the exercise of cross-border access / contact may fall within the scope of the 1996 Convention.” See “Conclusions & Recommendations of the Seventh meeting of the Special Commission on the practical operation of the 1980 and 1996 Hague Conventions (10-17 November 2017)”, C&R No 53, available on the HCCH website at < www.hcch.net > under “Child Abduction Section” then “7th Special Commission meeting (2017)”.

<sup>6</sup> See paras 153 et seq. of the attached Draft Practical Guide.

<sup>7</sup> Mr Paul Beaumont, Professor of European Union and Private International Law, University of Aberdeen, Scotland, United Kingdom.

15. It is thus suggested that the Experts' Group be given another opportunity to meet to discuss, amongst others, the issue of the shift of habitual residence following a non-return agreement. Subject to the outcome of this discussion, the Experts' Group may want to revise the Draft Practical Guide and to revisit its conclusions regarding the desirability and feasibility of developing a new binding instrument. The PB invites Council to consider the possibility that another meeting of the Experts' Group on Voluntary Agreements be convened in October or November 2018. The PB will report to Council in 2019.

A N N E X E S

DRAFT*Practical Guide to Family Agreements under the Hague Conventions*A. Introduction

1. The Practical Guide to Family Agreements under the Hague Convention aims to assist with rendering an agreement made in the area of family law involving children legally binding and enforceable in the two or more States concerned by the agreement. The Practical Guide focuses on the solutions offered by the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention,<sup>1</sup> the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention<sup>2</sup> and the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention.<sup>3</sup>

2. The Practical Guide contains the following three sample agreements: I. Relocation Agreement (an agreement for the envisaged lawful relocation of one parent with the minor child to another country), II.a Return agreement in a Hague Convention child abduction case (drawn up in the course of ongoing Hague return proceedings) and II.b. Non-Return agreement in a Hague Convention child abduction case (drawn up in the course of ongoing Hague return proceedings). The sample agreements are each followed by a flowchart giving an overview of the mechanisms offered by the Hague Conventions and a brief description of the flowchart and with references to further reading.

3. As an attachment, this Practical Guide contains an “Explanatory note on how an agreement made in the area of family law involving children can be recognised and enforced in a foreign State under the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention, the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention and the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention”. This explanatory note gives detailed background information and includes, inter alia, a checklist and drafting recommendations for family agreements. The flowchart descriptions make reference to the relevant parts of the Explanatory Note.

---

<sup>1</sup> Hague Convention of 25 October 1980 on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction (hereinafter, “the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention” or “the 1980 Convention”).

<sup>2</sup> Hague Convention of 19 October 1996 on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition, Enforcement and Co-operation in Respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of Children (hereinafter, “the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention” or “the 1996 Convention”).

<sup>3</sup> Hague Convention of 23 November 2007 on the International Recovery of Child Support and Other Forms of Family Maintenance (hereinafter, “the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention” or “the 2007 Convention”).

B. Sample agreements & flowcharts

Abbreviations used in the description of the flowcharts:

1980 HC – 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention;

1996 HC - 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention;

2007 HC – 2007 Hague Child Protection Convention;

2007 HP – 2007 Hague Protocol;

Att. Expl. Note – Attachment to this Guide: Explanatory note on how an agreement made in the area of family law involving children can be recognised and enforced in a foreign State under the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention, the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention and the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention;

Central Authorities 1980 – Central Authorities under the 1980 Hague Convention, contact details available at the website of the Hague Conference < www.hcch.net > under “Conventions”, then 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention, then “Central Authorities”;

Central Authorities 1996 – Central Authorities under the 1996 Hague Convention, contact details available at the website of the Hague Conference < www.hcch.net > under “Conventions”, then 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention, then “Central Authorities”;

Central Authorities 2007 – Central Authorities under the 2007 Hague Convention, contact details available at the website of the Hague Conference < www.hcch.net > under “Conventions”, then 2007 Hague Child Support Convention, then “Central Authorities”;

Country Profiles 1980 - Country Profiles under the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention, available at the website of the Hague Conference < www.hcch.net > under “Conventions”, then 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention, then “Country Profiles”;

Country Profiles 2007 - Country Profiles under the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention, available at the website of the Hague Conference < www.hcch.net > under “Conventions”, then 2007 Hague Child Support Convention, then “Country Profiles”;

C&R Oct 2017 SC - Conclusions and Recommendations of the Seventh Meeting of the Special Commission on the practical operation of the 1980 and 1996 Hague Conventions (10-17 October 2017), available at the website of the Hague Conference < www.hcch.net > under “Conventions”, then 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention, then “Special Commission meetings”;

Expl. Rep. 1980 - E. Pérez-Vera, Explanatory Report on the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention, available at < www.hcch.net > under “Publications” then “Explanatory Reports”;

Expl. Rep. 1996 - P. Lagarde, Explanatory Report on the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention, Proceedings of the Eighteenth Session (1996), Tome II, Protection of children, The Hague, SDU, 1998, pp. 535-605, available at < www.hcch.net > under “Publications” then “Explanatory Reports”;

Expl. Rep. 2007 - Explanatory Report on the 2007 Convention on the International Recovery of Child Support and Other Forms of Family Maintenance, Alegría Borrás & Jennifer Degeling, with the assistance of William Duncan and Philippe Lortie, 2013; available at < www.hcch.net > under “Publications” then “Explanatory Reports”;

Handbook 1996 - Practical Handbook on the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention, available at < www.hcch.net > under “Publications”.

Handbook 2007 - Practical Handbook for Caseworkers under the 2007 Child Support Convention, available at < www.hcch.net > under “Publications”.

I. Relocation agreement

We, the parents of Alma P., born on 25.6.2012 in State A, have come to conclude the following agreement as the result of a mediation process:

We currently habitually reside in State A. We are not married but have been cohabiting since the birth of our daughter and have joint rights of custody.

Relocation

We have decided to separate and agreed that Alma will together with her mother relocate in August 2018 to city X in State B with the intention to establish their habitual residence there. The costs of the relocation will entirely be borne by Alma's mother.

Joint exercise of custody

We intend to continue to exercise the rights of custody jointly. We will decide on important matters, such as our child's education or important health related questions jointly.

Education

We both wish that our child receives a bilingual education which allows her to remain completely fluent in both the language of State A and State B. We agree that as of September 2018 Alma will attend the State school in State B, which is generally cost free. Any extra charges relating to schooling will be borne by us on an equal basis. Emma will engage in finding a child carer, whose native language is that of State A and who will see Alma at least twice a week, in order to ensure that Alma remains fluent in the language of State A. The father will contribute a sum 100 EUR per month, which is considered a part of the father's maintenance payment. The subject of additional classes in the language of State A will be discussed once Alma has settled in her new environment.

Contact

Alma and her father will maintain contact on a regular basis by phone and skype. The mother promises to provide time for a skype call of father and child at least once during the week and once every weekend. The father will come to see Alma in State B every third calendar weekend. Alma will spend half of all annual school holidays with her father. In even years, she will spend the first half with her mother and the second half with her father; in uneven years she will spend the first half with her father and the second with her mother. The summer holidays will be split in 2-weeks-sequences. When Alma visits her father in State A, it is agreed that she can also stay with the paternal grand-parents whenever she likes. The parents engage in setting up a detailed calendar for each school year. When travelling between State A and B, Alma will be accompanied either by her mother or her father. Since Alma has a dual nationality, each parent will have a passport for Alma.

Travel costs

The parents agree to share the travel costs on an equal basis. For this purpose they will set up a common account. After transferring a start sum of 200 EUR each, we promise to transfer a monthly sum of 120 EUR each (ideally by standing order). Each parent can, when making travel-arrangements for a father-child contact visit, use the common account to pay the required tickets. Should the mother accompany Alma to State A, she can pay the costs for her own return ticket from the common account. We agree, however, that only trips from the child's residence in State B and to the father's residence in State A will be covered as well as the other way around. The common travel costs account will not be used to pay for any other journeys, e.g., when the father wishes to spend the holiday visiting time with his daughter in a location other than his home, he will be in charge of the entire travelling costs. We promise to agree on any additional transfers to the common account, should the amount not be sufficient to cover the next visits.

We recognise that the common provision of travel costs are crucial since they enable the father to maintain a regular personal contact with his daughter cross-border and we thus consider that the travelling costs as part of the exercise of parental responsibility. None of us shall have the right to set-off travelling costs against any other amounts due or allegedly due between us, including maintenance payments.

Child maintenance

We wish to contribute to all child related costs on an equal basis. Given the fact that as of the date of relocation, the housing, clothing and food of our daughter will be provided by her mother, the father promises to provide the mother with a monthly sum of 400 EUR. An additional 100 EUR will be provided as contribution for the language education related costs (see above under education). Any adaptation of this monthly sum will be discussed between the parents when necessary. The father will transfer the maintenance payment on each 1 of the month to the account of the mother, starting as of August 2018.

Informing our child

We agree that we will together explain to our daughter what we have decided. We have already explained to her that we are going to separate and that a relocation is envisaged. The mediator has talked to her in the course of the mediation and transmitted her worries to us.

Final clauses

We promise to undertake all steps necessary to render this agreement binding and enforceable in both State A and B before the relocation. We furthermore promise, whenever a dispute may occur between us concerning provisions contained in this agreement or any other matters, we will try to find an amicable solution and will have recourse to mediation when needed.

Full name father

Full name mother

Signature Father

Signature Mother

Place, January 2018

Place, January 2018

Flowchart I

Description of flowchart 1 – Relocation Agreement:

Title

Note	Description	Further references
1	To find out whether the relevant States are Contracting States to the 1996 HC and / or the 2007 HC see the up-to-date status information at the Hague Conference website. For the 2007 HC, please note that Contracting States can make a number of reservations and declarations, which can affect the scope of the Convention.	Status table Hague Conference website < www.hcch.net > under “Instruments” then “Conventions” then “1996 Convention” or “2007 Convention” then “Status table”

Recognition and enforcement with the help of the 1996 Hague Convention

Note	Description	Further references
2	The subjects covered by the agreement falling within the scope of the 1996 HC can be rendered enforceable in State B with the help of the 1996 HC. The 1996 HC has a very wide scope. It was drafted to facilitate the cross-border recognition of all kinds of measures of child protection, which in accordance with the applicable national law may exist. Since national family law differs considerably from one State to another, not all measures of child protection known in one Contracting State may be known in the other. Furthermore, since the concept of “child protection measure” in the 1996 HC is wider than it may be under some national laws, a situation may occur, where the parental agreement deals with a subject that generally falls within the scope of the 1996 HC but that under the applicable substantive law may not be included in a child protection measure in State A. Therefore, should the authority with internal jurisdiction in State A apply a substantive law test to the agreement the authority might refuse or not be able to include certain provisions of the agreement into the child protection measure. Once the content of the agreement is included in the child protection measure in Contracting State A in accordance with the jurisdiction rules of the 1996 HC, the Convention allows it to “travel” to any other Contracting State and take effect there independent of whether the national law of the other Contracting States might provide for such a measure under their national law. In our sample agreement the subjects covered by the scope of the 1996 HC are generally the points agreed on under the sub-headings “Relocation”, “Joint Exercise of custody”, “Education”, “Contact” and “Travel costs”. Not covered is the agreement that the mother will cover the costs of relocation. Furthermore, the education related costs are part of the child maintenance, as the parents clearly point out. The “Travel costs” can fall within the scope of the 1996 HC if they are, as noted here by the parents, crucial to “enable the father to maintain a regular personal contact with his daughter cross-border”. It will, however, depend on the substantive applicable law in State A whether the travel costs can be part of a child protection measure. It should be noted that provisions on travel costs could, depending on the reasons for their inclusion in the agreement, equally fall within the scope of the 2007 HC. Recommendation: Include a clear reasoning why travel cost arrangement is considered part of the exercise of parental responsibly.	Att. Expl. Note paras 113 et seq. Att. Expl. Note paras 113 et seq., Expl. Rep. 1996 paras 18 et seq., Handbook 1996 para. 1.1 and Chap. 3, See also C&amp;R Special Oct 2017 SC Nos 29-32. See further regarding which subjects typically addressed by family agreements can fall within the scope of the 1996 HC: Att. Expl. Note Chap. II, paras 53 et seq., For “travel cost” see Att. Expl. Note paras 61 et seq., see also C&amp;R Oct 2017 SC No 53.
2a	In the European Union , the so-called Brussels IIa Regulation (Council Regulation (EC) No 2201/2003 of 27 November 2003) takes precedence over the 1996 HC as between EU Member States bound by this Regulation but in some areas, eg applicable law, the 1996 HC applies between EU Member States.	The Att. Expl. Note refers to the particularities of the Brussels IIa Regulation in a number of footnotes.
3	The 1996 HC does not define the term “measure of child protection” . The Convention includes a non-exhaustive enumeration of issues, which can be contained in such a measure, but not how the measure can be established. From the context it is however clear that a parental agreement alone cannot constitute such a measure, the involvement of an “authority” is required . The procedural aspects are left to the national procedural law (see infra Note 5).	Att. Expl. Note para. 101 et seq. ,

4	In accordance with Article 5(1) of the 1996 HC, the authorities of the State of habitual residence of the child have international jurisdiction. In our example agreement, State A is the State of habitual residence of the whole family including the child. Recommendation: In the agreement it is recommendable to note the agreed understanding of where the habitual residence of each party (here most importantly that of the child) is situated. Similarly, the decision or other child protection measure in which the agreement is later included should make reference to the basis of jurisdiction and note relevant important facts. This assists in dispelling doubts concerning the measure's cross-border recognition: The 1996 HC provides that "[t]he authority of the requested State is bound by the findings of fact on which the authority of the State where the measure was taken based its jurisdiction", see Article 25.	Regarding the meaning of habitual residence see: Handbook 1996 paras 4.5-4.7 and 13.83-13.87, Att. Expl. Note Chap. V, 2, c).
5	The 1996 HC only regulates the international jurisdiction. Which authority inside State A has internal competence to adopt a measure of child protection and what procedure must be observed depend on the law of State A. Depending on the national law of State A there could be different parallel options how the agreement can be turned into a child protection measure in the sense of the 1996 HC. It could be that the agreements' content is embodied in a court decision. It is also conceivable that the national law of State A provides a specific mechanism to homologate the agreement or have it approved by an authority.
	Recommendation: Where a child protection measure is designed to take effect in another Contracting State, as is the case with our Relocation Agreement, certain additional considerations are recommendable. (1) It is important to safeguard that none of the grounds of non-recognition listed in Article 23(2) could hinder the cross border recognition. An adaptation of certain procedures can be recommendable to meet the (higher) procedural requirements of the State of recognition. See with regard to hearing the voice of the child infra Note 8. (2) The child protection measure should be drafted in a way to ensure that the enforcement can be done in accordance with the legal requirements of the law of the State of enforcement is possible. A typical matter for which conditions of enforceability are very different in national law is the arrangement of parent child contact. Certain legal systems require very precisely prescribed modalities of contact for them to be considered enforceable, such as for example "The father picks up his daughter at the mother's house at 12.30 on Saturdays". When wanting to guarantee the enforceability of the child protection measure in another Contracting State, the requirements national law poses for the "precision" of the measure's content must be considered.	Att. Expl. Note paras 114 et seq. Regarding the requirements for an "enforceable" content of a contact arrangement in accordance with the national law of the enforcement State see also Att. Expl. Note Chap. V – Checklist and Country Profiles Chap. 18 Enforcement of rights of access. The Central Authorities under the 1996 HC may assist in providing information on what constitutes an "enforceable content", see Articles 30(2) and 35(1) of the 1996 HC.
	The process of transforming the Relocation Agreement into a "measure of child protection" in State A will, as a side effect, also assist in rendering the agreement legally binding and enforceable in State A. Legal systems differ considerably as to what legal value they attribute to a family agreement as such, whether / which additional steps might be needed to render it legally binding and how it can become enforceable. Some legal systems give mediated agreements a privileged status if they result from a certified mediation. They may provide that mediated agreements are automatically enforceable or that they can be rendered enforceable in a simplified way.	For a brief overview of different approaches in national law see: Att. Expl. Note paras 27 et seq. For rendering mediated agreements enforceable in national law see: Country Profiles 1980 Chap. 19.5 The enforceability of mediated agreements; see also Att. Expl. Note para. 37.
6	Article 15 of the 1996 HC determines the applicable substantive law. In accordance with Article 15(1), the authorities with jurisdiction under the Convention generally apply their own law. There are no indications in our case that another law would have a closer connection. Hence, the authorities in State A would apply the law of the forum. Recommendation: If a child protection measure is designed to take effect in another Contracting State it can be important to take note of important principles of the law of that other legal system. The child protection measure must not be manifestly contrary to the public policy of the other Contracting State, otherwise the measure might not be recognisable in that State, see Article 23(2)d).	For further details on determining the applicable law see: Handbook 1996 Chap. 9. Att. Expl. Note para. 118, Chap. V, 2, d). The Central Authorities 1996 may assist in providing information on the public policy test applied in the other State.
7	The 1996 HC provides for automatic cross-border recognition of measures of child protection rendered in a Contracting State in accordance with the Convention rules.	Handbook 1996 paras 10.1 et

	That is to say the child protection measure rendered in one Contracting State is generally immediately legally binding in all other Contracting States to the 1996 HC without the need of a procedure. However, recognition can be refused if one of the limited grounds of non-recognition listed in Article 23(2) applies. To dispel any doubts concerning the recognition, an advance recognition in accordance with Article 24 can be requested from the competent authorities of State B.	seq.
8	Article 23(2)b) of the 1996 HC provides that the recognition of the child protection measure could be refused if it “was taken, except in a case of urgency, in the context of a judicial or administrative proceeding, without the child having been provided the opportunity to be heard, in violation of fundamental principles of procedure of the requested State”. This provision is directly inspired by Article 12 UNCRC, which enshrines the right of “the child who is capable of forming his or her own views the right to express those views freely in all matters affecting the child, the views of the child being given due weight in accordance with the age and maturity of the child.” National law, however, differs considerably as to the age as of which children are generally heard and by whom (the judge directly, or indirectly through being heard by a social worker or a psychologist etc. who then makes a report to the judge and may be available to answer questions by the judge and/or the parties) they are heard. It should be noted that the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child considers that the right of the child to be heard should also be respected in alternative dispute resolution mechanisms such as mediation. The right of the child to be heard does not imply that hearing the child in every case is a must. Depending on the circumstances of the case, hearing the child might be considered harmful for the child and thus be considered contrary to the child’s best interests. Furthermore, Article 23(2)b) of the 1996 HC implies that hearing the child in cases of urgency is not a necessity. In our case, the facts do not give any indication as to a specific risk for the child when being heard. There are also no indications of urgency in our case. Problems can, in particular, occur, should the law of State B require children to be heard at a younger age than the law of State A or should the method of hearing the child be very different and thus the authorities of State B consider that the individual child has not been given a sufficient opportunity to be heard in the other State. Recommendation: Should State B have “stricter” requirements for hearing the child, those “stricter” requirements should, to the extent feasible and appropriate regarding the individual child, be applied in State A when adopting the measure of child protection. In any case, the way the individual child has been involved and how the child’s views and best interests have been considered should be reflected in the terms of the child protection measure. It is recommendable to also reflect the involvement of the child or consideration of the child’s views in the mediation process in the terms of the mediated agreement (as has been done in our sample Relocation Agreement). Should the hearing of the individual child due to the child’s age and maturity or due to other circumstance be considered contrary to that child’s best interests, the reasons for not hearing the child should ideally be reflected in the reasoning of the child protection measure.	See further regarding the requirement of hearing the child: Att. Expl. Note para 117, Chap. V, 2, e). See for some indication of national law practice concerning hearing the child in proceedings relating to parental responsibility Country Profiles 1980 Chap. 17.3 Participation of the child. The Central Authorities 1996 may provide information on requirements of hearing the child in accordance with the law of State B, Article 30(2) of the 1996 HC. See also C&amp;R Oct 2017 SC No 50.
9	Rendering the child protection measures of State A enforceable in State B requires an extra step: obtaining a declaration of enforceability or registration for the purpose of enforcement. The law of State B regulates which authority in that State is competent and which procedure is followed, see Article 26(1) of the 1996 HC. However, the 1996 HC requires the procedure to be simple and rapid, see Article 26(2). The Central Authorities provide information on the competent authorities and relevant national procedure, 30(2) and 35(1) of the 1996 HC. Please note, that the enforceability in State B requires that the child protection measure is enforceable in State A.	The Central Authorities 1996 provide assistance , see Articles 30(2) and 35(1) of the 1996 HC.
10	The actual enforcement takes place in accordance with the law of State B. As noted above, it is important to safeguard that the child protection measure adopted in State A has an “enforceable” content in the sense of the national enforcement law of State B, see supra Note 5.	See for some indication of national enforcement law: Country Profiles 1980 Chap. 18 Enforcement of rights of access.

Recognition and enforcement with the help of the 2007 Hague Convention

11	The subjects covered by the agreement falling within the scope of the 2007 HC can be rendered enforceable in State B with the help of the 2007 HC.	Att. Expl. Note paras 120 et seq.
	The scope of the 2007 HC is defined in its Article 2. The Convention applies generally to child support arising out of a parent-child relationship towards children under the age of 21 years and to spousal support. However, spousal support does not benefit from the Central Authority support under the Convention with one exception: The application for recognition and enforcement of spousal support is made together with a claim for child support. It is very important to note that the Convention allows Contracting States to increase (by declaration) or restrict (by reservation) this general scope of application. Regarding child support, a Contracting State can restrict the applicability of the Convention to child support towards children under the age of 18 years. Contracting States can extend the application of Central Authority support to all applications for spousal support and or extend application of the Convention (or parts of it) to other forms of family maintenance. As between any two given Contracting States the Convention applies only in relation to the “coinciding” scope.	See for a detailed elaboration on the scope: Handbook 2007, Chap. 3, Part 1 - The scope of the Convention. All declarations and reservations made by Contracting States are displayed at the Hague Conference website &lt; www.hcch.net &gt; under “Instruments” then “Conventions” then “2007 Convention” then “Status table”.
	In our sample Relocation Agreement, the provisions on child and spousal support fall within the general scope of the Convention.	Att. Expl. Note Chap. II, paras 53 et seq.
11a	In the European Union, the Council Regulation (EC) No 4/2009 of 18 December 2008 on jurisdiction, applicable law, recognition and enforcement of decisions and cooperation in matters relating to maintenance obligations (the EU Maintenance Regulation) takes precedence over the 2007 HC as between EU Member States bound by this Regulation. All European Union Member States except Denmark and the United Kingdom apply the 2007 HP as part of the EU Maintenance Regulation.	The Att. Expl. Note refers to the particularities of the EU Maintenance Regulation in a number of footnotes.
12	An agreement on child and spousal maintenance can “travel” cross-border with the help of the 2007 HC in form of a so called “maintenance arrangement”. Article 3 of the 2007 HC defines a maintenance arrangement as “an agreement in writing relating to the payment of maintenance which i) has been formally drawn up or registered as an authentic instrument by a competent authority; or ii) has been authenticated by, or concluded, registered or filed with a competent authority, and may be the subject of review and modification by a competent authority”. Not all Contracting States provide for the possibility to establish such a maintenance agreement in their legal system, but they will, unless they have made a reservation under Article 30(8) recognise maintenance arrangements of other Contracting States. Whether the maintenance provisions of our sample Relocation Agreement can in State A be turned into a “maintenance arrangement” in the sense of the 2007 HC depends on the law of State A.	Att. Expl. Note paras 122, 129 et seq.
13	Contracting States to the 2007 HC can make a reservation under Article 30(8) that they will not recognise and enforce “maintenance arrangements”. Whether State A or State B have made such a reservation can be looked up in the status table at the Hague Conference website.	See the Hague Conference website &lt; www.hcch.net &gt; under “Instruments” then “Conventions” then “2007 Convention” then “Status table”.
14	The maintenance arrangement is established in accordance with the law of State A. It is important to note that the parties are free to establish their “maintenance arrangement” in any given Contracting State whose laws provide for such an option (and which has not made a reservation under Article 30(8)). Article 30 of the 2007 HC requires only that the arrangement is “made in a Contracting State” – the Convention does not require a specific connection to the parties or the case. Of course, the national procedural law of a Contracting State might limit the access to the option of establishing a “maintenance arrangement” to parties with a certain proximity to that State’s legal system. For our sample case this means, should the national law of State A not provide for the option of establishing a “maintenance arrangement” but the national law of State B does so, the parties could go to State B and have their maintenance agreement turned into an enforceable “maintenance arrangement” there. The arrangement could then be enforceable in State B and with the help of the 2007 HC also obtain enforceability in State A (provided neither State A nor State B have made a reservation under Article	Att. Expl. Note paras 105 et seq., para. 130. The Central Authorities 2007 may assist in providing information on how a maintenance arrangement can be established in the relevant Contracting State.

	30(8)).
15	The maintenance arrangement, which is meant to become enforceable in another Contracting State, should be drafted taking into consideration the grounds of non-recognition set out in Article 30(4) of the 2007 HC. In particular, taking note of the public policy test applied in the other Contracting State can be of importance.	The Central Authorities 2007 may assist in providing information on the public policy test applied in the other State.
16	The recognition and enforcement of maintenance arrangements under the 2007 Convention follows principally the same rules as the recognition and enforcement of decisions, see Article 19(4) of the 2007 HC. However, Article 30 slightly modifies these rules. In particular, a much more limited set of grounds of non-recognition applies to maintenance arrangements.	An application can be made through the Central Authority 2007 to assist with the rendering enforceable of the maintenance arrangement.
17	The enforcement itself is governed by the law of the State of enforcement. It is important to note that the demands on the precision of the maintenance claim for it to be considered “enforceable” under the national enforcement law can differ considerably. For example, in one legal system, the term “the debtor pays 10% of his monthly gross income” may be considered sufficiently precise, in other States the amount must be quantified exactly. Recommendation: The terms on maintenance drafted to be rendered enforceable in another legal system should be drafted with an “enforceable” content in the understanding of the national enforcement law of the State of enforcement. In the case of our sample Relocation Agreement, the terms on maintenance will most likely, if at all, have to be enforced in State A and not in State B, since the maintenance debtor remains in State A. It might therefore be sufficient to comply with the requirements of national enforcement law of State A.	For information on national enforcement law see the Country Profiles 2007 IV Information concerning the enforcement rules and procedures.
18	The agreement can be embodied in a decision in the sense of Article 19(1) of the 2007 HC.	Att. Expl. Note paras 107, 120 et seq. , 128.
19	The 2007 HC does not contain direct rules on international jurisdiction; however, the Convention contains negative rules on jurisdiction (in Article 18) and indirect rules on jurisdiction (Article 20). A maintenance decision, meant to be rendered enforceable in another Contracting State, should be established in respect of these rules of jurisdiction. Otherwise the recognition might be refused. It is important to underline that not all grounds of jurisdiction referred to in Article 20 are applicable in relations between all Contracting States. Reservations are, in accordance with Article 20(2), possible with regard to the grounds contained in Article 20(1) c), e) and f). Recommendation: Verify whether reservations under Article 20(2) have been made by State A or State B. Base international jurisdiction on the grounds that guarantee a recognition of the decision in State B. Include a reference to the facts that justify the use of the relevant ground of jurisdiction in the reasoning of the decision.	Att. Expl. Note para. 120. See the Hague Conference website &lt; www.hcch.net &gt; under “Instruments” then “Conventions” then “2007 Convention” then “Status table”.
20	The law of State A regulates which (administrative or judicial) authority is competent to embody the parental agreement in a decision in the sense of Article 19(1) of the 2007 HC. The procedure is equally governed by the law of State A.	For information on the national competent authority see: Country Profiles 2007 III 2 .
21	Depending on the procedural law of State A, the authority in State A seized to deal with matters of parental responsibility might also have competency to deal with matters of maintenance.
22	The substantive law applicable to maintenance matters is determined in accordance with the 2007 HP in all States bound by this treaty. The applicable law rules of the 2007 HP have universal application, they apply independent of whether another State with which the case has a link is a Contracting State and also independent of whether the law determined as applicable in accordance with the rules of the HP is the law of a Contracting State. The substantive law of the State of enforcement can indirectly play a role: the decision should be rendered taking into account the public policy test applied in the other Contracting State to avoid the recognition of the decision being refused.
23	The 2007 HC provides two different procedures for the recognition and enforcement. Article 23 contains the default procedure. This procedure is replaced by Article 24, the alternative procedure, in the case a Contracting State makes a reservation in	See the Hague Conference website < www.hcch.net > under “Instruments” then accordance with Article 24(1).	"Conventions" then "2007 Convention" then " Status table ".

--	--------------------------------	--

Other subjects

24	Rendering subjects contained in a family agreement that fall neither in the scope of the 1996 HC nor the scope of the 2007 HC legally binding and enforceable in the two or more legal systems concerned by the agreement can be much more cumbersome. It is possible that regional or bilateral agreements in force between the relevant States facilitate the task.	Att. Expl. Note paras 50, 89, 138.
25	If there is no relevant international, regional or bilateral treaty in force between the States, it will depend on the autonomous private international law of State B, whether the agreement or the agreements' content embodied in a decision can be recognised and rendered enforceable in State B.	Att. Expl. Note para. 41.
26	If there is no possibility to have the agreement or its content recognised in the other State or if this process is too cumbersome or costly, the alternative of rendering the agreement enforceable in accordance with domestic procedures in both State A and State B should be considered.	Att. Expl. Note para. 51.

II. Child abduction case

Background info:

X and Y are parents of Leo K. born in 2011 in State B. The family habitually resided in State B. X and Y are married and have shared rights of custody in accordance with the rights of State B. For the last two years the spouses have been facing severe relationship problems. When, in summer 2017, mother X and son spend part of the holidays with the maternal family in State A, X decides unilaterally not to go back to State B and enrolls Leo in school in State A. Y's requests to return Leo to State B remain unanswered; Y initiated Hague return proceedings in October 2017. In the course of the Hague return proceedings specialised mediation leads to an agreement.

II.a. Return Agreement

We, the parents of Leo K., born on 4.5.2011 in State B, have come to conclude the following agreement as the result of mediation taking place in State A.

We are married and have in accordance with the law of State B joint rights of custody of our son. We have been cohabiting in State B until last summer.

We have decided to separate but we both want to play an equal role in the upbringing and education of our son. We want to end the Hague return proceedings with this agreement.

Return to State B

The mother will return with Leo to State B to end the "child-abduction" situation. They will return by train on 15 November 2017; the train ticket will be bought by the mother.

The father states that he has not brought a criminal claim against the mother in State B and promises to refrain from doing so. The father promises to consult with the Central Authorities to obtain before the date of return a confirmation that no criminal investigations / proceedings have been initiated against the mother in State B.

Arrangements upon arrival in State B

In the first (at least 8) weeks upon arrival in State B, mother and son will be able to reside in the family home, which is the father's property. The father will temporarily move into his parents' house until the mother has found a new apartment.

Exercise of parental responsibility

We want to exercise the rights of custody jointly. We will decide on important matters, such as our child's education or important health related questions jointly.

Leo will live with his mother, who will from now on be the sole primary carer of Leo. Leo will spend every second weekend (even calendar week) with his father, who will pick him up after school on Fridays and bring him to school on Mondays following the weekend visit.

Leo will spend half of his school holidays with his mother and the other half with his father. In even years, Leo will spend the first half with his mother and the second half with his father; in uneven years the order switches. The summer holidays will be split in 2-weeks-sequences.

Visits of the maternal grandparents and extended family in State A

In the school holidays Leo spends with his mother, mother and son will also be allowed to travel to State A to visit the maternal family.

The mother recognises that her unilateral decision not to return Leo after the summer holidays 2017 has been a very painful experience for the father and that he does not want to risk a repetition of this experience. The father recognises that Leo has very strong links with the maternal family and that visiting the maternal family in State A in the course of school holidays must remain an option.

Child maintenance and spousal maintenance

The father promises to provide a monthly sum of 400 EUR for child related expenses to the mother. The father furthermore promises to provide a monthly sum of 300 EUR of spousal support to the mother until the divorce is granted.

Informing our child

We agree that we will explain to our son together what we have decided. We have already explained to him that we are going to divorce. The mediator has talked to him in the course of the mediation and we have had a chance to take note of his views.

Final clauses

We promise to undertake all steps necessary to render this agreement binding and enforceable in both State A and B ideally before the date of return. We will submit this agreement to the court seized with the Hague return proceedings and ask the court to end the proceedings by settlement. The father undertakes to end the ongoing custody proceedings in State B by immediately submitting this agreement to the court and asking the court to render a decision in line with the terms of this agreement. We agree to share the costs of the custody proceedings in State B.

We furthermore promise, whenever a dispute may occur between us concerning provisions contained in this agreement or any other matters, we will try to find an amicable solution and will have recourse to mediation when needed.

Full name father

Full name mother

Signature Father

Signature Mother

Place, 5 November 2017

Place, 30 October 2017

Flowchart II.a.

Description of Flowchart II.a. – Return Agreement:

Title / headings

Note	Description	Further references
1	To find out whether the relevant States are Contracting States to the 1980 HC and / or 1996 HC and / or the 2007 HC see the up-to-date status information at the Hague Conference website. For the 1980 HC, please note that a State's accession to the Convention needs to be accepted by a State Party to the Convention for it to enter into force as between these States. For the 2007 HC, please note that Contracting States can make a number of reservations and declarations, which can affect the scope of the Convention.	Status table Hague Conference website < www.hcch.net > under "Instruments" then "Conventions" then "1980" or "1996 Convention" or "2007 Convention" then "Status table".
2	The Flowchart addresses a situation in which Hague return proceedings are ongoing in State A with regard to a child, whose habitual residence immediately before the wrongful removal /retention was in State B

Return / non-return

Note	Description	Further references
3	The term "return" in this box refers to the child's travelling back to State B. Not to the question where the child will long-term reside and with whom.  The return proceedings under the 1980 HC deal with the "return" of the wrongfully removed or retained child as a main subject.	Att. Expl. Note paras 95 et seq.
3a	In the European Union , the so-called Brussels IIa Regulation (Council Regulation (EC) No 2201/2003 of 27 November 2003) provides a number of additional provisions to the operation of the 1980 HC in EU Member States bound by the Regulation.	The Att. Expl. Note refers to the particularities of the Brussels IIa Regulation in a number of footnotes.
4	The courts of State A have the authority under the 1980 HC to decide on the matter of return of the child under the Convention.  The national law of State A decides which court(s) can hear such Convention cases and which procedure is to be followed. Many States have introduced "concentrated jurisdiction" for return proceedings under the 1980 HC and this is highly recommended.	For details on the national particularities of Hague return proceedings see: Country Profile 1980 Chap. 10 - Proceedings for return.
5	The "return" in the sense of the 1980 HC does not need to be rendered enforceable in State A – it is implemented de facto .

Practical arrangements relating to the safe return of the child

Note	Description	Further references
6	As concerns the provisions in the agreement that relate to the practical arrangements surrounding the return, one needs to distinguish:  (1) First, return agreements regularly include provisions that relate to the preparation and details of the return itself , such as the date of return, the means of transport used and who pays for the required tickets. When a court seized with the Hague return proceedings renders a decision on return under the 1980 HC, these "modalities of the return" are regularly part of the decision under the 1980 HC and are covered by the court's competency under the 1980 HC . These matters do not require enforceability in State B, since they will be implemented in State A. It should be noted that these matters equally fall within the scope of the 1996 HC as matters of child protection securing the child's safe return. However, jurisdiction of the authorities in State A under the 1996 HC can, while Hague return proceedings are ongoing, only be based on Article 11 of the 1996 HC (see below).  (2) Secondly, the agreement can include provisions that relate to details surrounding the return to be implemented in State B , such as for example, who will pick up the child from the station / airport should the child travel alone, or, where will the child be accommodated immediately upon return. This category of provisions can also regulate with whom the child will stay and have contact when arriving in State B (see for the	Att. Expl. Note paras 81 et seq.

	differentiation to provisions relating to the merits of custody and long-term exercise of parental responsibility infra Note 12) All these matters relate to securing the safe return of the child and fall within the scope of the 1996 HC. The authorities of State A can in the situation of ongoing Hague return proceedings exercise international jurisdiction under the 1996 HC solely based on Article 11 of the 1996 HC, presupposing a case of “urgency”. (3) Thirdly, the agreement can contain arrangements surrounding the return that relate directly to the parent returning with the child. The 1980 HC focuses on the return of the child. The return of the parent cannot be ordered. The 1996 HC focuses on child protection measures only. For this third category of terms to fall within the scope of the 1996 HC it would have to be argued that the provisions are part of ensuring the safe return of the child and can thus be part of a measure of child protection. If this is denied, other ways to render an agreement on these matters binding in State B would have to be explored.
6a	In the European Union , the so-called Brussels IIa Regulation (Council Regulation (EC) No 2201/2003 of 27 November 2003) takes precedence over the 1996 HC as between EU Member States bound by this Regulation.	The Att. Expl. Note refers to the particularities of the Brussels IIa Regulation in a number of footnotes.
7	While Hague return proceedings are ongoing, the authorities of State A do not have the right to decide on the merits of custody, see Article 16 of the 1980 HC. This rule is underpinned by Article 7 of the 1996 HC, which provides that the international jurisdiction on matters falling within the scope of the 1996 HC remains, as long as Hague return proceedings are ongoing, in the State where the child had his / her habitual residence immediately before the wrongful removal or retention. However, the authorities in the State to which the child was taken, here State A, can exercise jurisdiction under the 1996 HC based on Article 11 in cases of urgency. The Convention does not define what is a “case of urgency” nor does it define what constitutes a “necessary” measure. Recommendation: The authority rendering a measure of child protection based on Article 11 of the 1996 HC should include a clear reasoning why it considered that the circumstances of the case indicate a case of urgency and why it considers the child protection measure “necessary”.	For what situation can imply “urgency” in the sense of Article 11 of the 1996 HC see: Expl. Rep. 1996 para. 68; Handbook 1996 Chap. 6, paras 6.2-6.5 and 13.5-13.12. For when a measure is “necessary” see: Handbook 1996 Chap. 6, paras 6.6-6.7. See also: Att. Expl. Note para. 148.
8	The national procedural law of State A regulates the internal jurisdiction and procedure. Therefore it depends on the law of State A, whether an authority seized with the Hague return proceedings in State A has competence to render a necessary measure of child protection under Article 11 of the 1996 HC .
9	The child protection measure taken under Article 11 of the 1996 HC is limited in time: It lapses as soon as the authorities in the Contracting State with general jurisdiction under Articles 5-10 have taken measures required by the situation, see Article 11(2). The measure taken in accordance with Article 11 can be recognised and enforced in other Contracting States under the 1996 HC in accordance with the Convention provisions on recognition and enforcement. Recommendation: In order to safeguard the continued protection of the child, the authority which has taken a measure under Article 11 should communicate the measure to the authorities in the other Contracting State concerned. The communication can take place directly between competent authorities with the help of direct judicial communication. Similarly, a communication via the Central Authorities is an option.	Handbook 1996 Chap. 6, paras 6.8 et seq.

Long-term decisions on exercise of parental responsibility, merits of custody

Note	Description	Further references
10	All subjects addressed in the agreement that relate to the exercise of parental responsibility, custody and contact fall within the scope of the 1996 HC.	Att. Expl. Note paras 113 et seq.
11	As stated above, in the situation of ongoing Hague return proceedings, the international jurisdiction on the merits of custody remains with the authorities in State B. The authorities in State A do not have jurisdiction to take a decision on these matters, see Article 16 of the 1980 HC and Article 7 of the 1996 HC .	Att. Expl. Note paras 148 et seq.

	Should an authority in State A despite the ban of Article 16 of the 1980 HC render a decision on these matters, it would not be recognisable in State B under the Hague Conventions. If parents regulate the long-term exercise of parental responsibility in their return agreement, the authority seized with the Hague return proceedings in State A cannot transform these provisions into a binding measure of child protection under the 1996 HC. The parents have to turn to the authorities of State B to have these terms of their agreement turned binding for all 1996 HC Contracting States. A shift of jurisdiction is only possible once the return proceedings have formally ended. For further details on the conditions for a shift of jurisdiction see the description of the flowchart II.b. Non-return Agreement.
12	However, the authorities in State A could use the jurisdiction under Article 11 of the 1996 HC to include provisional measures on the care and contact arrangement which are meant to apply immediately upon return if the conditions of Article 11 are met. In our sample Return Agreement, the matters agreed on under the heading “Exercise of parental responsibility” are clearly aimed to regulate matters of custody and long-term contact. However, one could argue that these provisions include an agreement on the arrangement of care and contact immediately upon return. If the court seized with the Hague return proceedings considers the conditions of Article 11 of the 1996 HC as met it could include a provisional “upon arrival” care and contact arrangement in the measure of child protection under the 1996 HC (provided the Hague court has internal jurisdiction in accordance with the laws of State A). The care and contact arrangement would then be binding in both State A and B until the authorities with jurisdiction under Articles 5-10 of the 1996 HC replace or confirm it.	For further details on measures of protection under Article 11 of the 1996 HC see: Handbook 1996 Chap. 6. Att. Expl. Note paras 84 and 148.
13	An agreement on custody and long-term contact arrangements cannot be included in a binding way in a decision or other measure taken by the court seized with the Hague return proceedings in State A (nor by any other authority of State A as long as the Hague return proceedings are ongoing). The parties have to turn to State B whose authorities have jurisdiction under Article 7 of the 1996 HC.	Att. Expl. Note paras 147 et seq.
14	The 1996 HC only regulates the international jurisdiction. Which authority inside State A has internal competency to adopt a measure of child protection and what procedure must be observed depends on the law of State A. Depending on the national law of State A there could be different parallel options how the agreement can be turned into a child protection measure in the sense of the 1996 HC. It could be that the agreements’ content is embodied in a court decision. It is also conceivable that the national law of State A provides a specific mechanism to homologate the agreement or have it approved by an authority. The Central Authorities 1996 provide information on the competent authorities and relevant national procedure, see Articles 30(2) and 35(1) of the 1996 HC. Very often in international child abduction cases, custody proceedings in the State from which the child was taken are already pending. This court would then have to be addressed when wanting to render the provisions on custody and long-term contact arrangements binding in State B and make it recognisable and enforceable with the help of the 1996 HC in other Contracting States. In our sample Return Agreement the left-behind parent promises to ask the court seized with custody proceedings in State B (with jurisdiction under Article 7 of the 1996 HC) to end the proceedings with a settlement reproducing the terms of the agreement.	The Central Authorities 1996 provide assistance, see Articles 30(2) and 35(1) of the 1996 HC.
15	Article 15 of the 1996 HC determines the applicable substantive law. In accordance with Article 15(1), the authorities with jurisdiction under the Convention generally apply their own law. The authorities in State B would apply the law of the forum.	For further details on determining the applicable law see: Handbook 1996 Chap. 9
16	PROBLEMS: In child abduction cases, parents often conclude comprehensive “package” agreements, such as the sample Return Agreement, which regulates besides the return and the modalities of return also questions of custody and contact. The court seized with the Hague return proceedings is unable to render the entire agreement binding and enforceable with an effect for both State A and State B. The parties are forced to take the part of their agreement relating to custody and long-term contact arrangements to State B and have it included in a measure of child protection there.	Att. Expl. Note paras 148 et seq.

	Problems in practice occur, where the procedure in State B is lengthy. The court seized with the Hague return proceedings has to act expeditiously and has to conclude the proceedings within a very short timeframe, there are no such obligations under the 1996 HC. As a result, parents may find themselves with a partially valid agreement: all provisions on return and the modalities of return are binding, but the provisions on custody and contact are not. It is possible that the taking parent refuses to implement the return if the agreement is not fully binding. Furthermore, precarious situations can arise, should the left behind parent following the return of the child and taking parent to State B refuse to cooperate and not respect the agreement. Recommendation: There are a number of good practices that can be recommended to the court seized with the Hague proceedings in such a situation. (1) A provision on a care and contact arrangement immediately upon return can be included in the settlement / decision based on the jurisdiction in accordance with Article 11 of the 1996 HC (provided the court considers the conditions of Article 11 as fulfilled); (2) Direct judicial communications can be used to inform the authorities (including the competent authority) of the State of return of the return agreement and the settlement / decision rendering part of the parental agreement binding. Direct judicial communications might also assist in encouraging swift action to give force to the remainder of the agreement.	For further details on Direct Judicial Communications see Att. Expl. Note para 151.
17	The 1996 HC provides for automatic cross-border recognition of measures of child protection rendered in a Contracting State in accordance with the Convention rules. That is to say the child protection measure rendered in one Contracting State is generally immediately legally binding in all other Contracting States to the 1996 HC without the need of a procedure. However, recognition can be refused if one of the limited grounds of non-recognition listed in Article 23(2) applies. To dispel any doubts concerning the recognition, an advance recognition in accordance with Article 24 can be requested from the competent authorities of State A. In our case, the court seized with the Hague return proceedings in State A will be the first authority having knowledge of the agreement. They will be able to draw to the parties' attention any provisions that might be problematic with regard to the public policies of State A.	Handbook 1996 paras 10.1 et seq.
18	Article 23(2)b) of the 1996 HC provides that the recognition of the child protection measure could be refused if it "was taken, except in a case of urgency, in the context of a judicial or administrative proceeding, without the child having been provided the opportunity to be heard, in violation of fundamental principles of procedure of the requested State". This provision is directly inspired by Article 12 UNCRC, which enshrines the right of "the child who is capable of forming his or her own views the right to express those views freely in all matters affecting the child, the views of the child being given due weight in accordance with the age and maturity of the child." National law, however, differs considerably as to the age as of which children are generally heard and by whom (the judge directly, or indirectly through being heard by a social worker or a psychologist etc. who then makes a report to the judge and may be available to answer questions by the judge and/or the parties) they are heard. It should be noted that the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child considers that the right of the child to be heard should also be respected in alternative dispute resolution mechanisms such as mediation. The right of the child to be heard does not imply that hearing the child in every case is a must. Depending on the circumstances of the case, hearing the child might be considered harmful for the child and thus be considered contrary to the child's best interests. Furthermore, Article 23(2)b) of the 1996 HC implies that hearing the child in cases of urgency is not a necessity.	See further regarding the requirement of hearing the child: Att. Expl. Note para 117, Chap. V, 2, e). See for some indication of national law practice concerning hearing the child in proceedings relating to parental responsibility Country Profiles 1980 Chap. 17.3 Participation of the child. The Central Authorities 1996 may provide information on requirements of hearing the child in accordance with the law of State B, Article 30(2) of the 1996 HC.
19	PROBLEM: The child is present in State A when the parents conclude the Return Agreement. If the parents try to render their agreement on custody and contact legally binding in front of the authorities of State B (having jurisdiction under Article 7 of the 1996 HC) they will want to do so before the return. This means the child is not present in State B, which will make a "hearing of the child" difficult unless video conferencing facilities or the like would be used.
20	Rendering the child protection measures of State B enforceable in State A requires an extra step: obtaining a declaration of enforceability or registration for the purpose of enforcement. The law of State B regulates which authority is competent and which procedure is followed, see Article 26(1) of the 1996 HC. However, the 1996 HC requires the procedure to be simple and rapid, see Article 26(2). The Central Authorities provide information on the competent authorities and relevant national procedure, see Articles 30(2) and 35(1) of the 1996 HC.	The Central Authorities 1996 provide assistance, see Articles 30(2) and 35(1) of the 1996 HC

	Please note, that the enforceability in State A requires that the child protection measure is enforceable in State B. In the case of the sample Return Agreement, the State in which the care and contact arrangement would principally have to be implemented is State B. However, a recognition of the agreement in all Contracting States with which the family has a connection would be desirable, as might be an enforceability of the agreement in State A to which the child will regularly travel in accordance with the terms of the agreement.
	The actual enforcement takes place in accordance with the law of State B. As noted above, it is important to safeguard that the child protection measure adopted in State A has an “enforceable” content in the sense of the national enforcement law of State B, see supra Note 5.	See for some indication of national enforcement law: Country Profiles 1980 Chap. 18 Enforcement of rights of access

Recognition and enforcement with the help of the 2007 Hague Convention

21	The subjects covered by the agreement falling within the scope of the 2007 HC can be rendered enforceable in State B with the help of the 2007 HC. (The 2007 HC could in our case equally be used to make the maintenance related content of the Return agreement travel from State B to State A, i.e. to have the agreement turned into a maintenance arrangement or included in a decision in State B and then use the 2007 Convention to obtain recognition in State A.)	Att. Expl. Note paras 120 et seq.
	The scope of the 2007 HC is defined in its Article 2. The Convention applies generally to child support arising out of a parent-child relationship towards children under the age of 21 years and to spousal support. However, spousal support does not benefit from the Central Authority support under the Convention with one exception: The application for recognition and enforcement of spousal support is made together with a claim for child support. It is very important to note that the Convention allows Contracting States to increase (by declaration) or restrict (by reservation) this general scope of application. Regarding child support, a Contracting State can restrict the applicability of the Convention to child support towards children under the age of 18 years. Contracting States can extend the application of Central Authority support to all applications for spousal support and or extend application of the Convention (or parts of it) to other forms of family maintenance. As between any two given Contracting States the Convention applies only within the “coinciding” scope.	See for a detailed elaboration on the scope: Handbook 2007, Chap. 3, Part 1 - The scope of the Convention. All declarations and reservations made by Contracting States are displayed at the Hague Conference website &lt; www.hcch.net &gt; under “Instruments” then “Conventions” then “2007 Convention” then “Status table”.
	In our sample Return Agreement, the provisions on child and spousal support fall within the general scope of the Convention.	Att. Expl. Note Chap. II, paras 53 et seq.,
21a	In the European Union, the Council Regulation (EC) No 4/2009 of 18 December 2008 on jurisdiction, applicable law, recognition and enforcement of decisions and cooperation in matters relating to maintenance obligations (the EU Maintenance Regulation) takes precedence over the 2007 HC as between EU Member States bound by this Regulation. All European Union Member States except Denmark and the United Kingdom apply the 2007 HP as part of the EU Maintenance Regulation.	The Att. Expl. Note refers to the particularities of the EU Maintenance Regulation in a number of footnotes.
22	An agreement on child and spousal maintenance can “travel” cross-border with the help of the 2007 HC in form of a so called “maintenance arrangement”. Article 3 of the 2007 HC defines a maintenance arrangement as “an agreement in writing relating to the payment of maintenance which i) has been formally drawn up or registered as an authentic instrument by a competent authority; or ii) has been authenticated by, or concluded, registered or filed with a competent authority, and may be the subject of review and modification by a competent authority”. Not all Contracting States provide for the possibility to establish such a maintenance agreement in their legal system, but they will, unless they have made a reservation under Article 30(8) recognise maintenance arrangements of other Contracting States. Whether the maintenance provisions of our sample Return Agreement can in State A be turned into a “maintenance arrangement” in the sense of the 2007 HC depends on the law of State A.	Att. Expl. Note paras 122, 129 et seq.
23	Contracting States to the 2007 HC can make a reservation under Article 30(8) that they will not recognise and enforce “maintenance arrangements”. Whether State A or	See the Hague Conference website &lt; www.hcch.net &gt;

	State B have made such a reservation can be looked up in the status table at the Hague Conference website.	under “Instruments” then “Conventions” then “2007 Convention” then “Status table” .
24	The maintenance arrangement is established in accordance with the law of State A. It is important to note that the parties are free to establish their “maintenance arrangement” in any given Contracting State whose laws provide for such an option (and which has not made a reservation under Article 30(8)). Article 30 of the 2007 HC requires only that the arrangement is “made in a Contracting State” – the Convention does not require a specific connection to the parties or the case. Of course, the national procedural law of a Contracting State might limit the access to the option of establishing a “maintenance arrangement” to parties with a certain proximity to that State’s legal system. For our sample case this means, the parties are generally free to establish a maintenance arrangement in either State A or State B. The flowchart illustrates the mechanisms that apply if the maintenance arrangement is established in State A. However, should the national law of State A not provide for the option of establishing a “maintenance arrangement” but the national law of State B does so, the parties could go to State B and have their maintenance agreement turned into an enforceable “maintenance arrangement” there. The arrangement if enforceable in State B could then with the help of the 2007 HC be rendered enforceability in State A (provided neither State A nor State B have made a reservation under Article 30(8)).	Att. Expl. Note paras 105 et seq., para. 130. The Central Authorities 2007 may assist in providing information on how a maintenance arrangement can be established in the relevant Contracting State.
25	The maintenance arrangement, which is meant to become enforceable in another Contracting State, should be drafted taking into consideration the grounds of non-recognition set out in Article 30(4) of the 2007 HC. In particular, taking note of the public policy test applied in the other Contracting State can be of importance.	The Central Authorities 2007 may assist in providing information on the public policy test applied in the other State.
26	The recognition and enforcement of maintenance arrangements under the 2007 Convention follows principally the same rules as the recognition and enforcement of decisions, see Article 19(4) of the 2007 HC. However, Article 30 slightly modifies these rules. In particular, a much more limited set of grounds of non-recognition applies to maintenance arrangements.	An application can be made through the Central Authority 2007 to assist with the rendering enforceable of the maintenance arrangement.
27	The enforcement itself is governed by the law of the State of enforcement. It is important to note that the demands on the precision of the maintenance claim for it to be considered “enforceable” under the national enforcement law can differ considerably. For example, in one legal system, the term “the debtor pays 10% of his monthly gross income” may be considered sufficiently precise, in other States the amount must be quantified exactly. Recommendation: The terms on maintenance drafted to be rendered enforceable in another legal system should be drafted with an “enforceable” content in the understanding of the national enforcement law of the State of enforcement.	For information on national enforcement law see Country Profiles 2007 IV Information concerning the enforcement rules and procedures
28	The agreement can be embodied in a decision in the sense of Article 19(1) of the 2007 HC.	Att. Expl. Note paras 107, 120 et seq. , 128.
29	The 2007 HC does not contain direct rules on international jurisdiction; however, the Convention contains negative rules on jurisdiction (in Article 18) and indirect rules on jurisdiction (Article 20). A maintenance decision, meant to be rendered enforceable in another Contracting State, should be established in respect of these rules of jurisdiction. Otherwise the recognition might be refused. It is important to underline that not all grounds of jurisdiction referred to in Article 20 are applicable in relations between all Contracting States. Reservations are, in accordance with Article 20(2), possible with regard to the grounds contained in Article 20(1) c), e) and f). Recommendation: Verify whether reservations under Article 20(2) have been made by State A or State B. Base international jurisdiction on the grounds that guarantee a recognition of the decision in State B. Include a reference to the facts that justify the use of the relevant ground of jurisdiction in the reasoning of the decision.	Att. Expl. Note para. 120.
30	The law of State A regulates which (administrative or judicial) authority is competent to embody the parental agreement in a decision in the sense of Article 19(1) of the 2007	For information on the national competent authority the

	HC. The procedure is equally governed by the law of State A. It will depend on the procedural law of State A, whether the court seized with the Hague return proceedings has the internal competency to include the agreement on matters of maintenance in the court settlement or decision terminating the Hague proceedings.	Country Profiles 2007 III 2.
31	The substantive law applicable to maintenance matters is determined in accordance with the 2007 HP in all States bound by this treaty. The applicable law rules of the 2007 HP have universal application, they apply independent of whether another State with which the case has a link is a Contracting State and also independent of whether the law determined as applicable in accordance with the rules of the HP is the law of a Contracting State. The substantive law of the State of enforcement can indirectly play a role: the decision should be rendered taking into account the public policy test applied in the other Contracting State to avoid the recognition of the decision being refused.
32	The 2007 HC provides two different procedures for the recognition and enforcement. Article 23 contains the default procedure, which is replaced by Article 24, the alternative procedure, in the case a Contracting State makes a reservation in accordance with Article 24(1).

Other subjects

33	Rendering subjects contained in a family agreement that fall neither in the scope of the 1996 HC nor the scope of the 2007 HC legally binding and enforceable in the two or more legal systems concerned by the agreement can be much more cumbersome. It is possible that regional or bilateral instruments in force between the relevant States facilitate the task.	Att. Expl. Note paras 50, 89, 138.
34	If there is no relevant international, regional or bilateral instrument in force between the States, it will depend on the autonomous private international law of State B, whether the agreement or the agreements' content embodied in a decision can be recognised and rendered enforceable in State B.	Att. Expl. Note para. 41.
35	If there is no possibility to have the agreement or its content recognised in the other State or if this process is too cumbersome or costly, the alternative of rendering the agreement enforceable in accordance with domestic procedures in both State A and State B should be considered.	Att. Expl. Note para. 51.

II.b. Non-Return Agreement

We, the parents of Leo K., born on 4.5.2011 in State B, have come to conclude the following agreement as the result of mediation taking place in State A.

We are married and have in accordance with the law of State B joint rights of custody of our son. We have been cohabiting in State B until last summer.

We have decided to separate but we both want to play an equal role in the upbringing and education of our son. We want to end the Hague return proceedings with this agreement.

Non-Return and new habitual residence

We have come to agree that Leo and his mother will remain in State A and we acknowledge that Leo is now habitually resident in State A. Leo is resident in State A since July 2017 and he and his mother have integrated into the life of State A (give examples of how this has happened) and as his parents (the only holders of parental responsibility) we are agreed that Leo has become and should remain habitually resident in State A. We want to end the Hague return proceedings with this settlement.

Exercise of parental responsibility

We want to continue to exercise the rights of custody jointly. We will decide on important matters, such as our child's education or important health related questions jointly.

Leo will live with his mother, who will from now on be the sole primary carer of Leo.

Contact

Leo and his father will maintain contact on a regular basis by phone and skype. The mother promises to provide time for a skype call of father and child at least once during the week and once every weekend. The father will come to see Leo in State A every third calendar weekend. Leo will spend half of all annual school holidays with his father in State B (or any other State where Leo's father chooses to take Leo on holiday with the consent of Leo's mother). In even years, he will spend the first half with his mother and the second half with his father; in uneven years he will spend the first half with his father and the second with his mother. The summer holidays will be split in 2-weeks-sequences. When Leo visits his father in State B, it is agreed that he can also stay with the paternal grandparents whenever he likes. The parents engage in setting up a detailed calendar for each school year. When travelling between State A and B, Leo will be accompanied either by his mother or his father. Since Leo has dual nationality, each parent will have a passport for Leo.

The father states that he has not brought a criminal claim against the mother in State B and promises to refrain from doing so. The father promises to consult with the Central Authorities to obtain before the mother first travelling to State B a confirmation that no criminal investigations / proceedings have been initiated against the mother in State B.

Travel costs

The father will take over all costs for his visits to State A. The mother recognises that the travel costs are a heavy burden on the father's budget and accepts these costs will be counted as a part of the father's contribution to the child's maintenance.

Child maintenance and spousal maintenance

The father promises to provide a monthly sum of 400 EUR for child related expenses to the mother.

Divorce

We agree to prepare filing a joint divorce application in State B.

Informing our child

We agree that we will explain to our son together what we have decided. The mediator has talked to him in the course of the mediation and we have had a chance to take note of his views about where he should live and how he can maintain a meaningful relationship with both his parents.

Final clauses

We promise to undertake all steps necessary to render this agreement binding and enforceable in both State A and B as quickly as possible. We will submit this agreement to the court seized with the Hague return proceedings and ask the court to end the proceedings by settlement. The father undertakes to end the ongoing custody proceedings in State B by immediately submitting this agreement to the court and asking the court to render a decision in line with the terms of this agreement. We agree to share the costs of the custody proceedings in State B.

We furthermore promise, whenever a dispute may occur between us concerning provisions contained in this agreement or any other matters, we will try to find an amicable solution and will have recourse to mediation when needed.

Full name father

Full name mother

Signature Father

Signature Mother

Place, 5 November 2017

Place, 30 October 2017

Flowchart II.b.

Description of Flowchart II.b. – Non-Return Agreement:

Title / headings

Note	Description	Further references
1	To find out whether the relevant States are Contracting States to the 1980 HC and / or 1996 HC and / or the 2007 HC see the up-to-date status information at the Hague Conference website. For the 1980 HC, please note that a State's accession to the Convention needs to be accepted by a State Party to the Convention for it to enter into force as between these States. For the 2007 HC, please note that Contracting States can make a number of reservations and declarations, which can affect the scope of the Convention.	Status table Hague Conference website < www.hcch.net > under "Instruments" then "Conventions" then "1980 Convention" or "1996 Convention" or "2007 Convention" then "Status table"
2	The Flowchart addresses a situation in which Hague return proceedings are ongoing in State A with regard to a child, whose habitual residence immediately before the wrongful removal /retention was in State B

Return / non-return

Note	Description	Further references
3	The 1980 HC deals with the return of the wrongfully removed or retained child as the main subject. The return must be ordered unless one of the limited exceptions applies. However, the 1980 HC promotes and supports party autonomy. A court seized with Hague return proceedings can terminate the Hague proceedings with a settlement or consent order in accordance with a parental agreement.	Att. Expl. Note paras 95 et seq.
3a	In the European Union , the so-called Brussels IIa Regulation (Council Regulation (EC) No 2201/2003 of 27 November 2003) provides a number of additional provisions to the operation of the 1980 HC in EU Member States bound by the Regulation.	The Att. Expl. Note refers to the particularities of the Brussels IIa Regulation in a number of footnotes.
4	The courts of State A have international jurisdiction under the 1980 HC to decide on the matter of return of the child under the Convention.  The national law of State A decides which court has internal jurisdiction and which procedure is to be followed. Many States have introduced "concentrated jurisdiction" for return proceedings under the 1980 HC.	For details on the national particularities of Hague return proceedings see: Country Profile 1980 Chap. 10 - Proceedings for return

Ad hoc arrangement of care and contact

Note	Description	Further references
5	A parental non-return agreement always contains by its very nature an agreement on the child's future place of living: The child will remain in State A and will no longer be living in State B. The parents regularly include detailed provisions on the exercise of parental responsibility, including who will be the primary carer and what contact arrangements will be put in place.
6	All subjects addressed in the agreement that relate to the exercise of parental responsibility, custody and contact fall within the scope of the 1996 HC.	Att. Expl. Note paras 113 et seq.
6a	In the European Union , the so-called Brussels IIa Regulation (Council Regulation (EC) No 2201/2003 of 27 November 2003) takes precedence over the 1996 HC as between EU Member States bound by this Regulation.	The Att. Expl. Note refers to the particularities of the Brussels IIa Regulation in a number of footnotes.
7	While Hague return proceedings are ongoing, the authorities of State A do not have the right to decide on the merits of custody, see Article 16 of the 1980 HC. This rule is underpinned by Article 7 of the 1996 HC, which provides that the international jurisdiction on matters falling within the scope of the 1996 HC remains, as long as the Hague return proceedings are ongoing, in the State where the child had his / her habitual residence immediately before the wrongful removal or retention. However, the authorities in the State to which the child was taken, here State A, can exercise	For what situation can imply "urgency" in the sense of Article 11 of the 1996 HC see: Expl. Rep. 1996 para. 68; Handbook 1996 Chap. 6, paras 6.2-6.5 and 13.5-13.12.

	jurisdiction under the 1996 HC based on Article 11 in cases of urgency and take “necessary measures”. The Convention does not define what is a case of “urgency”, nor does it define what constitutes a “necessary measure”. Recommendation: The authority rendering a measure of child protection based on Article 11 of the 1996 HC should include clear reasoning why it considers that the circumstances of the case indicate a case of urgency and why the child protection measure is “necessary”.	For when a measure is “necessary” see: Handbook 1996 Chap. 6, paras 6.6-6.7 See also: Att. Expl. Note para. 148.
8	The national procedural law of State A regulates the internal jurisdiction and procedure. Therefore it depends on the law of State A, whether an authority seized with the Hague return proceedings in State A has competency to render a necessary measure of child protection under Article 11 of the 1996 HC.
9	The child protection measure taken under Article 11 of the 1996 HC is limited in time: It lapses as soon as the authorities in the Contracting State with general jurisdiction under Articles 5-10 have taken measures required by the situation, see Article 11(2). The measure taken in accordance with Article 11 can be recognised and enforced in other Contracting States under the 1996 HC in accordance with the Convention provisions on recognition and enforcement.	Handbook 1996 Chap. 6, paras 6.8 et seq.

Long-term decisions on exercise of parental responsibility, merits of custody

Note	Description	Further references
10	All subjects addressed in the agreement that relate to the exercise of parental responsibility, custody and contact fall within the scope of the 1996 HC.	Att. Expl. Note paras 113 et seq.
11	As stated above, in the situation of ongoing Hague return proceedings, the international jurisdiction on the merits of custody remains with the authorities in State B. The authorities in State A do not have jurisdiction to take a decision on these matters, see Article 16 of the 1980 HC and Article 7 of the 1996 HC. Should an authority in State A despite the ban of Article 16 of the 1980 HC render a decision on these matters, it would not be recognisable in any other State under the Hague Conventions. If parents regulate the long-term exercise of parental responsibility in their return agreement, the authority seized with the Hague return proceedings in State A cannot transform these provisions into a binding measure of child protection under the 1996 HC until the return proceedings have formally ended. To be discussed at a possible new Expert’s Group meeting: However, if the court finds that the child’s habitual residence has changed to State A and that the conditions for a shift of jurisdiction in accordance with Article 7 of the 1996 HC are met and if the court has internal jurisdiction to give its blessing to the agreement between the parties the court can render the agreement enforceable simultaneously with ending the return proceedings. Of course, the fact that the 1996 HC is in force between the two relevant States and that a shift of international jurisdiction on the merits of custody has occurred under this Convention does not alter Article 16 of the 1980 HC. However, Article 16 of HC 1980 only prevents the court from “deciding on the merits of rights of custody until it has been determined that the child is not to be returned under this Convention” (emphasis added). It could be argued that in the light of a literal, systematic and teleological interpretation of Article 16 this provision should not be an obstacle to the Hague court’s giving effect to the agreement simultaneously with ending the Hague return proceedings. As set out by the 1980 HC Explanatory Report, Article 16 is meant to “promote the realization of the Convention’s objects regarding the return of the child” (see para 121 of the Expl.Rep. 1980). The Article aims to avoid the misuse of custody proceedings by the taking parent in the State of refuge bringing about conflicting custody decisions and circumventing the Convention’s return mechanism. Where the court seized with the Hague return proceedings ends the proceedings by approving a parental agreement on non-return, this is a correct use of the 1980 HC and not a circumvention of it. Where this argument is not followed, the court seized with the Hague return proceedings, could (if the national procedural law allows) end the Hague	Att. Expl. Note paras 153 et seq.

	return proceedings in implementing the agreement on non-return and immediately reopen proceedings to approve the remainder of the agreement. (If the members of the Expert's Group agree with recommending this interpretation of Article 16 of the 1980 HC we will need some equivalent changes in the Explanatory Note.)
12	A shift of international jurisdiction on the merits of custody from State B to State A can in our case occur under the following conditions: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>- The Hague return proceedings must be terminated, see Article 16 of the 1980 HC; AND</li> <li>- The conditions of Article 7 of the 1996 HC for a shift of jurisdiction must be fulfilled; OR</li> <li>- jurisdiction in accordance with Article 8 and 9 of the 1996 HC has been transferred.</li> </ul> It would be ideal if the parties could obtain enforceability of their entire agreement through the decision or settlement rendered by the court seized with the Hague return proceedings. This is, however, impossible, because Article 16 of the 1980 HC bans a decision on the merits of custody while return proceedings are pending. It would be conceivable that the court seized with the Hague return proceedings ends the Hague return proceedings and sits immediately afterwards as court with jurisdiction on matters of custody (provided the internal procedural law allows this) to include the parental agreement on custody in a binding measure of child protection. This requires, however, that the conditions for a shift of jurisdiction in accordance with Article 7 or Article 8 and 9 of the 1996 HC are met. Article 7 requires first of all a shift of the habitual residence of the child, which is in accordance with prevailing views at least a partially fact-based concept. The child must thus have established some links with the new environment; a shift of habitual residence by mere parental agreement without a factual base seems excluded. Of course the factual basis can be the presence of the child in State A since the wrongful removal or retention (and all the connections that the child has made in State A while present there) coupled with the fact that the holders of parental responsibility are now agreed that State A is where the child is habitually resident and should remain habitually resident. As a second condition, Article 7 requires the acquiescence of "each person, institution or other body having rights of custody". It would have to be explored whether in the individual case there are persons, institutions or bodies other than the parties to the agreement that need to give their approval. As concerns the option of a transfer of jurisdiction, it must be highlighted that this is an option still scarcely used and which could be time-consuming. However, judges should not hesitate to explore this option in appropriate cases, ideally assisted by direct judicial communication. Should transfer of jurisdiction be more frequently used it could become a very effective tool.	Att. Expl. Note para. 156.
13	If the above described (supra Note 12) conditions for a shift of jurisdiction are not given, the agreement on custody and long-term contact arrangements must be taken to State B whose authorities have jurisdiction under Article 7 of the 1996 HC.	Att. Expl. Note para. 157.
14	The 1996 HC only regulates the international jurisdiction. Which authority inside State A has internal competency to adopt a measure of child protection and what procedure must be observed depends on the law of State A. Depending on the national law of State A there could be different parallel options how the agreement can be turned into a child protection measure in the sense of the 1996 HC. It could be that the agreements' content is embodied in a court decision. It is also conceivable that the national law of State A provides a specific mechanism to homologate the agreement or have it approved by an authority. The Central Authorities 1996 provide information on the competent authorities and relevant national procedure, 30(2) and 35(1) of the 1996 HC. Very often in international child abduction cases, custody proceedings in the State from which the child was taken are already pending. This court would then have to be addressed when wanting to render the provisions on custody and long-term contact arrangements binding in State B and make it recognisable and enforceable with the help of the 1996 HC in other Contracting States.	The Central Authorities 1996 provide assistance , see Articles 30(2) and 35(1) of the 1996 HC.

	In our sample Non-Return Agreement the left-behind parent promises to ask the court seized with custody proceedings in State B (with jurisdiction under Article 7 of the 1996 HC) to end the proceedings with a settlement reproducing the terms of the agreement).
15	Article 15 of the 1996 HC determines the applicable substantive law. In accordance with Article 15(1), the authorities with jurisdiction under the Convention generally apply their own law. The authorities in State B would apply the law of the forum.	For further details on determining the applicable law see: Handbook 1996 Chap. 9.
16	PROBLEMS: As noted above, in child abduction cases, parents often conclude comprehensive “package” agreements, such as the sample Return Agreement, which regulates besides the return and the modalities of return also questions of custody and contact. The court seized with the Hague return proceedings is unable to render the entire agreement binding and enforceable with an effect for both State A and State B. The parties are forced to take the part of their agreement relating to custody and long-term contact arrangements to State B and have it included in a measure of child protection there or wait until the jurisdiction under Article 7 of the 1996 HC shifts to state A or transfer jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 8 and 9. Problems in practice occur, where the procedure in State B is lengthy. The court seized with the Hague return proceedings has to act expeditiously and has to conclude the proceedings within a very short timeframe, there are no such obligations under the 1996 HC. As a result, parents may find themselves with a partially valid agreement. Recommendation: There are a number of good practices that can be recommended to the court seized with the Hague proceedings in such a situation. (1) A provision on ad hoc care and contact arrangements can be included in the Hague settlement / decision based on the jurisdiction in accordance with Article 11 of the 1996 HC (provided the court considers the conditions of Article 11 are fulfilled); (2) Direct judicial communications can be used to inform the authorities (including the competent authority) of State B and to assist in encouraging swift action to give force to the remainder of the agreement.	Att. Expl. Note paras 155 et seq. For further details on measures of protection under Article 11 of the 1996 HC see: Handbook 1996 Chap. 6. For further details on Direct Judicial Communications see Att. Expl. Note para 151.
17	The 1996 HC provides for automatic cross-border recognition of measures of child protection rendered in a Contracting State in accordance with the Convention rules. That is to say the child protection measure rendered in one Contracting State is generally immediately legally binding in all other Contracting States to the 1996 HC without the need of a procedure. However, recognition can be refused if one of the limited grounds of non-recognition listed in Article 23(2) applies. To dispel any doubts concerning the recognition, an advance recognition in accordance with Article 24 can be requested from the competent authorities of State A. In our case, the court seized with the Hague return proceedings in State A will be the first authority having knowledge of the agreement. They will be able to draw to the parties’ attention any provisions that might be problematic with regard to the public policies of State A.	Handbook 1996 paras 10.1 et seq.
18	Article 23(2)b) of the 1996 HC provides that the recognition of the child protection measure could be refused if it “was taken, except in a case of urgency, in the context of a judicial or administrative proceeding, without the child having been provided the opportunity to be heard, in violation of fundamental principles of procedure of the requested State”. This provision is directly inspired by Article 12 UNCRC, which enshrines the right of “the child who is capable of forming his or her own views the right to express those views freely in all matters affecting the child, the views of the child being given due weight in accordance with the age and maturity of the child.” National law, however, differs considerably as to the age as of which children are generally heard and by whom (the judge directly, or indirectly through being heard by a social worker or a psychologist etc. who then makes a report to the judge and may be available to answer questions by the judge and/or the parties) they are heard. It should be noted that the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child considers that the right of the child to be heard should also be respected in alternative dispute resolution mechanisms such as mediation. The right of the child to be heard does not imply that hearing the child in every case is a must. Depending on the circumstances of the case, hearing the child might be considered harmful for the child and thus be considered contrary to the child’s best interests. Furthermore, Article 23(2)b) of the 1996 HC implies that the hearing the child in cases of urgency is not a necessity.	See further regarding the requirement of hearing the child: Att. Expl. Note para 117, Chap. V, 2, e). See for some indication of national law practice concerning hearing the child in proceedings relating to parental responsibility Country Profiles 1980 Chap. 17.3 Participation of the child. The Central Authorities 1996 may provide information on requirements of hearing the child in accordance with the law of State B, Article 30(2) of the 1996 HC.
19	PROBLEM: The child is present in State A when the parents conclude the Non-Return Agreement. If the parents try to render their agreement on custody and contact legally binding in front of the authorities of State B (having jurisdiction under Article 7 of the 1996 HC) the child will not be in State B. Complying with the requirement of giving the child an opportunity to be heard in State B will be difficult unless video conferencing facilities or alike would be used.

20	Rendering the child protection measures of State B enforceable in State A requires an extra step: obtaining a declaration of enforceability or registration for the purpose of enforcement. The law of State B regulates which authority is competent and which procedure is followed, see Article 26(1) of the 1996 HC. However, the 1996 HC requires the procedure to be simple and rapid, see Article 26(2). The Central Authorities provide information on the competent authorities and relevant national procedure, 30(2) and 35(1) of the 1996 HC. Please note, that the enforceability in State A requires that the child protection measure is enforceable in State B.	The Central Authorities 1996 provide assistance, see Articles 30(2) and 35(1) of the 1996 HC.
	The actual enforcement takes place in accordance with the law of State B. As noted above, it is important to safeguard that the child protection measure adopted in State A has an “enforceable” content in the sense of the national enforcement law of State B, see supra Note 5.	See for some indication of national enforcement law: Country Profiles 1980 Chap. 18 Enforcement of rights of access.

Recognition and enforcement with the help of the 2007 Hague Convention

21	The subjects covered by the agreement falling within the scope of the 2007 HC can be rendered enforceable in State B with the help of the 2007 HC. (The 2007 HC could in our case equally be used to make the maintenance related content of the Return agreement travel from State B to State A, i.e. to have the agreement turned into a maintenance arrangement or included in a decision in State B and then use the 2007 Convention to obtain recognition in State A.)	Att. Expl. Note paras 120 et seq.
	The scope of the 2007 HC is defined in its Article 2. The Convention applies generally to child support arising out of a parent-child relationship towards children under the age of 21 years and to spousal support. However, in accordance with the default scope of the Convention, the spousal support does not benefit from the Central Authority support under the Convention with one exception: The application for recognition and enforcement of spousal support is made together with a claim for child support. It is very important to note that the Convention allows Contracting States to increase (by declaration) or restrict (by reservation) this general scope of application. Regarding child support, a Contracting State can restrict the applicability of the Convention to child support towards children under the age of 18 years. Contracting States can extend the application of Central Authority support to all applications for spousal support and /or extent application of the Convention (or parts of it) to other forms of family maintenance. As between any two given Contracting States the Convention applies only within the “coinciding” scope.	See for a detailed elaboration on the scope: Handbook 2007, Chap. 3, Part 1 - The scope of the Convention. All declarations and reservations made by Contracting States are displayed at the Hague Conference website &lt; www.hcch.net &gt; under “Instruments” then “Conventions” then “2007 Convention” then “Status table”.
	In our sample Non-Return Agreement, the provisions on child and spousal support fall within the general scope of the Convention. Equally the agreement that the travel costs paid by the father should be considered part of his provision of child maintenance is a provision that can fall within the scope of the 2007 HC.	Att. Expl. Note Chap. II, paras 53 et seq.
21a	In the European Union , the Council Regulation (EC) No 4/2009 of 18 December 2008 on jurisdiction, applicable law, recognition and enforcement of decisions and cooperation in matters relating to maintenance obligations (the EU Maintenance Regulation) takes predominance over the 2007 HC as between EU Member States bound by this Regulation. All European Member States except Denmark and the United Kingdom apply the 2007 HP as part of the EU Maintenance Regulation.	The Att. Expl. Note refers to the particularities of the EU Maintenance Regulation in a number of footnotes.
22	An agreement on child and spousal maintenance can “travel” cross-border with the help of the 2007 HC in form of a so called “maintenance arrangement”. Article 3 of the 2007 HC defines a maintenance arrangement as “an agreement in writing relating to the payment of maintenance which i) has been formally drawn up or registered as an authentic instrument by a competent authority; or ii) has been authenticated by, or concluded, registered or filed with a competent authority, and may be the subject of review and modification by a competent authority”. Not all Contracting States provide for the possibility to establish such a maintenance agreement in their legal system, but they will, unless they have made a reservation under Article 30(8) recognise maintenance arrangements of other Contracting States.	Att. Expl. Note paras 122, 129 et seq.

	Whether the maintenance provisions of our sample Non-Return Agreement can in State A be turned into a “maintenance arrangement” in the sense of the 2007 HC depends on the law of State A.
23	Contracting States to the 2007 HC can make a reservation under Article 30(8) that they will not recognise and enforce “maintenance arrangements”. Whether State A or State B have made such a reservation can be looked up in the status table at the Hague Conference website.	See the Hague Conference website < www.hcch.net > under “Instruments” then “Conventions” then “2007 Convention” then “ Status table ”.
24	The maintenance arrangement is established in accordance with the law of State A. It is important to note that the parties are free to establish their “maintenance arrangement” in any given Contracting State whose laws provides for such an option (and which has not made a reservation under Article 30(8)). Article 30 of the 2007 HC requires only that the arrangement is “made in a Contracting State” – the Convention does not require a specific connection to the parties or the case. Of course, the national procedural law of a Contracting State might limit the access to the option of establishing a “maintenance arrangement” to parties with a certain proximity to that State’s legal system. For our sample case this means, should the national law of State A not provide for the option of establishing a “maintenance arrangement” but the national law of State B does so, the parties could go to State B and have their maintenance agreement turned into an enforceable “maintenance arrangement” there. The arrangement could then be enforceable in State B and with the help of the 2007 HC also obtain enforceability in State A (provided neither State A nor State B have made a reservation under Article 30(8)).	Att. Expl. Note paras 105 et seq., para. 130. The Central Authorities 2007 may assist in providing information on how a maintenance arrangement can be established in the relevant Contracting State.
25	The maintenance arrangement, which is meant to become enforceable in another Contracting State, should be drafted taking into consideration the grounds of non-recognition set out in Article 30(4) of the 2007 HC. In particular, taking note of the public policy test applied in the other Contracting State can be of importance.	The Central Authorities 2007 may assist in providing information on the public policy test applied in the other State.
26	The recognition and enforcement of maintenance arrangements under the 2007 Convention follows principally the same rules as the recognition and enforcement of decisions, see Article 19(4) of the 2007 HC. However, Article 30 slightly modifies these rules. In particular, a much more limited set of grounds of non-recognition applies to maintenance arrangements.	An application can be made through the Central Authority 2007 to assist with the rendering enforceable of the maintenance arrangement.
27	The enforcement itself is governed by the law of the State of enforcement. It is important to note that the demands on the precision of the maintenance claim for it to be considered “enforceable” under the national enforcement law can differ considerably. For example, in one legal system, the term “the debtor pays 10% of his monthly gross income” may be considered sufficiently precise, in other States the amount must be quantified exactly. Recommendation: The terms on maintenance drafted to be rendered enforceable in another legal system should be drafted with an “enforceable” content in the understanding of the national enforcement law of the State of enforcement.	For information on national enforcement law see the Country Profiles 2007 IV Information concerning the enforcement rules and procedures.
28	The agreement can be embodied in a decision in the sense of Article 19(1) of the 2007 HC.	Att. Expl. Note paras 107, 120 et seq. , 128.
29	The 2007 HC does not contain direct rules on international jurisdiction; however, the Convention contains negative rules on jurisdiction (in Article 18) and indirect rules on jurisdiction (Article 20). A maintenance decision, meant to be rendered enforceable in another Contracting State, should be established in respect of these rules of jurisdiction. Otherwise the recognition might be refused. It is important to underline that not all grounds of jurisdiction referred to in Article 20 are applicable in relation between all Contracting States. Reservations are, in accordance with Article 20(2), possible with regard to the grounds contained in Article 20(1) c), e) and f). Recommendation: Verify whether reservations under Article 20(2) have been made by State A or State B. Base international jurisdiction on the grounds that guarantee a recognition of the decision in State B. Include a reference to the facts that justify the use of the relevant ground of jurisdiction in the reasoning of the decision.	Att. Expl. Note para. 120.

30	The law of State A regulates which (administrative or judicial) authority is competent to embody the parental agreement in a decision in the sense of Article 19(1) of the 2007 HC. The procedure is equally governed by the law of State A. It will depend on the procedural law of State A, whether the court seized with the Hague return proceedings has the internal competency to include the agreement on matters of maintenance in the court settlement or decision terminating the Hague proceedings.	For information on the national competent authority the Country Profiles 2007 III 2.
31	The substantive law applicable to maintenance matters is determined in accordance with the 2007 HP in all States bound by this treaty. The applicable law rules of the 2007 HP have universal application, they apply independent of whether another State with which the case has a link is a Contracting State or not and also independent of whether the law determine as applicable in accordance with the rules of the HP is the law of a Contracting State. As a basic rule, the 2007 HP determines the law of the habitual residence of the creditor as the law applicable to the maintenance matter. Thus, an authority with subject matter jurisdiction in State A seized to include the maintenance terms of the Non-return Agreement into a decision would in case of a substantive law control of the agreement apply its own substantive law. However, the substantive law of the State of enforcement can come to play an indirect role: the decision should be rendered taking into account the public policy test applied in the other Contracting State to avoid recognition of the decision being refused.
32	The 2007 HC provides two different procedures for the recognition and enforcement. Article 23 contains the default procedure, which is replaced by Article 24, the alternative procedure, in the case a Contracting State makes a reservation in accordance with Article 24(1).

Other subjects

33	Rendering subjects contained in a family agreement that fall neither in the scope of the 1996 HC nor the scope of the 2007 HC legally binding and enforceable in the two or more legal systems concerned by the agreement can be much more cumbersome. It is possible that regional or bilateral instrument in force between the relevant States facilitate the task.	Att. Expl. Note paras 50, 89, 138.
34	If there is no relevant international, regional or bilateral instrument in force between the States, it will depend on the autonomous private international law of State B, whether the agreement or the agreements' content embodied in a decision can be recognised and rendered enforceable in State B.	Att. Expl. Note para. 41.
35	If there is no possibly to have the agreement or its content recognised in the other State or if this process is too cumbersome or costly, the alternative of rendering the agreement enforceable in accordance with domestic procedures in both State A and State B should be considered.	Att. Expl. Note para. 51.

C. Attachment:

Explanatory note on how an agreement made in the area of family law involving children can be recognised and enforced in a foreign State under the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention, the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention and the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention

OBJECTIVES AND SCOPE OF THE EXPLANATORY NOTE .....	xxxiv
TERMINOLOGY .....	xxxiv
BACKGROUND .....	xxxv
STRUCTURE .....	xxxvii
I. PRELIMINARY CONSIDERATIONS.....	xxxviii
1. Agreements in a purely national context .....	xxxviii
a) Limits to party autonomy in family law.....	xxxviii
b) Distinguishing legal validity and enforceability .....	xxxix
2. Agreements in a purely national context which later need to be rendered legally binding and enforceable abroad .....	xl
3. Agreements in family disputes that have a cross-border element from the outset .....	xli
II. SUBJECT MATTERS ADDRESSED IN INTERNATIONAL FAMILY LAW AGREEMENTS .....	xlii
1. Parental responsibility.....	xliii
a) Exercise of parental responsibility including rights of custody and contact .....	xliii
b) Attribution of parental responsibility .....	xliii
2. Maintenance .....	xliii
3. Financing travel arrangements of regular cross-border parent-child visits.....	xliv
4. Costs of education.....	xliv
5. Property of the child .....	xliv
6. Separation of property in the context of divorce.....	xlvi
7. Particular subject matters relevant in international child abduction cases .....	xlvi
a) Return, non-return .....	xlvi
b) Practical arrangement of return including one-time travel costs for the return .....	xlvi
c) Criminal charges .....	xlvi
8. Other matters.....	xlvi
III. THE 1980, 1996, 2007 HAGUE CONVENTIONS – WHAT THEY OFFER.....	xlvi
1. General remarks – how the Conventions respect and promote agreement and assist in making the agreement itself “travel” cross-border.....	xlvi
a) The 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention .....	xlvi
b) The 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention.....	xlix
c) The 2007 Hague Child Support Convention .....	li
2. How can the content of an agreement embodied in a decision or other measure or respectively as “maintenance arrangement” “travel” cross-border with the assistance of the 1996 and 2007 Conventions?.....	lii
a) The 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention .....	lii
b) The 2007 Hague Child Support Convention.....	liii
IV. APPROACHING TYPICAL CROSS-BORDER FAMILY CONFLICT SITUATIONS.....	liv
1. Agreements in the context of cross-border relocation .....	liv
2. Agreements in cross-border contact cases.....	lvi
3. International child abduction (return and non-return agreement) .....	lvii
a) Return agreement .....	lviii
b) Non-return agreement .....	lix
V. CHECKLIST FOR RENDERING AN AGREEMENT LEGALLY BINDING AND ENFORCEABLE IN THE STATES CONCERNED & RECOMMENDATIONS FOR THE PREPARATION OF AGREEMENTS .....	lxi
1. Checklist .....	lxi
2. Recommendations for the preparation of agreements .....	lxiii

a) "Place" of the agreement and choice of process accompanying the amicable settlement of the dispute .....	lxiii
b) Reflections on the international instruments assisting in making the agreement or its content "travel" across borders .....	lxiv
c) Reflections on the connecting factor "habitual residence" used in the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Hague Conventions .....	lxiv
d) Reflections on the applicable substantive law(s) .....	lxv
e) Reflections on the hearing of the child and consideration of the child's best interests .....	lxvi
f) Reflections concerning agreements that can only partially obtain legal effect in the States concerned .....	lxvii

OBJECTIVES AND SCOPE OF THE EXPLANATORY NOTE

4. The explanatory note aims to give detailed background information on how an agreement made in the area of family law involving children can be recognised and enforced in a foreign State. The explanatory note will explore, in particular, the solutions offered by the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention,<sup>4</sup> the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention<sup>5</sup> and the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention.<sup>6</sup> The particularities resulting from the application of certain regional instruments will be added in the footnotes.<sup>7</sup>

5. It must be highlighted that questions of how agreements on family law matters can be (rendered) legally binding and enforceable in a given legal system are questions that also relate to substantive family law and national procedural law. This is why the explanatory note will not be able to provide comprehensive answers to all aspects of “giving force to agreed solutions in family law international disputes concerning children”. The note will rather focus on how to assist in the drafting of agreements and possible steps to take with a view to improving the agreement’s chances of being rendered legally binding and enforceable in the two or more States concerned by the dispute with the help of existing global private international law instruments: the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Conventions.

6. Even though the need for assistance with rendering agreements binding and enforceable was first discussed in the context of international child abduction, the subject matter explored in the explanatory note is broader in scope. The explanatory note will deal with agreements made in the area of family law involving children in general. The explanatory note will thereby consider agreements on child related matters but also touch upon agreements in the context of divorce and separation made in respect of matrimonial property issues. However, only for matters falling within the scope of the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Conventions will the explanatory note be able to provide detailed guidance.

TERMINOLOGY

Parental responsibility<sup>8</sup>

7. As defined in the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention, the term “parental responsibility” refers to “parental authority, or any analogous relationship of authority determining the rights, powers and responsibilities of parents, guardians or other legal representatives in relation to the person or the property of the child”.<sup>9</sup> In other words, “parental responsibility” includes all legal rights and duties a parent, a guardian or other legal representatives have in respect of a child with a view to raising the child and ensuring the child’s development. The concept of “parental responsibility” encompasses “rights of custody” as well as “rights of contact”, but is much broader than these two. Where parental rights and duties are referred to as a whole, many legal systems as

<sup>4</sup> Hague Convention of 25 October 1980 on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction (hereinafter, “the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention” or “the 1980 Convention”).

<sup>5</sup> Hague Convention of 19 October 1996 on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition, Enforcement and Cooperation in Respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of Children (hereinafter, “the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention” or “the 1996 Convention”).

<sup>6</sup> Hague Convention of 23 November 2007 on the International Recovery of Child Support and Other Forms of Family Maintenance (hereinafter, “the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention” or “the 2007 Convention”).

<sup>7</sup> In the European Union, in particular the following two Regulations are of relevance, since they have predominance over the international rules at least for intra-EU matters: Council Regulation (EC) No 2201/2003 of 27 November 2003 concerning jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in matrimonial matters and the matters of parental responsibility, repealing Regulation (EC) No 1347/2000 (hereinafter, “the Brussels IIa Regulation”); and Council Regulation (EC) No 4/2009 of 18 December 2008 on jurisdiction, applicable law, recognition and enforcement of decisions and cooperation in matters relating to maintenance obligations (hereinafter, “the EU Maintenance Regulation”).

<sup>8</sup> The clarification of the term “parental responsibility” has been taken from the Guide to Good Practice on Mediation, see Permanent Bureau of the Hague Conference on Private International Law, Guide to Good Practice under the Hague Convention of 25 October 1980 on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction – Mediation, The Hague, 2012 (hereinafter, “Guide to Good Practice on Mediation”).

<sup>9</sup> See Art. 1(2) of the 1996 Convention.

well as regional and international instruments today refer to the term “parental responsibility”. This is to overcome the terminological focus in this area of law on the parents’ rights and to acknowledge the equal importance of parental duties and children’s rights and welfare.

~~7.8.~~ As concerns the term “rights of access”, the explanatory note gives preference to the term “rights of contact” which reflects a child-centred approach in line with the modern concept of “parental responsibility”.<sup>10</sup> The term “contact” is used in a broad sense to include the various ways in which a non-custodial parent (and sometimes another relative or established friend of the child) maintains personal relations with the child, whether through periodic visitation or access, by distance communication or by other means.<sup>11</sup> The explanatory note uses the term “rights of custody” in accordance with the terminology of the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention.

Family agreement

~~9.~~ The term “family agreement” is used in this explanatory note to refer to an agreement in the area of family law involving children. The term family is thereby used in a broad sense in line with the understanding promoted by the General Comments No 14(2013) of the Committee on the Rights of the Child including “biological, adoptive or foster parents or, where applicable, the members of the extended family or community as provided for by local custom”.<sup>12</sup> Where the explanatory note for reasons of simplification refers to “parental agreements” the terms stand for agreements between “holders of parental responsibility”.

Package agreement

~~10.~~ The term “package agreement” is used in this explanatory note to refer to family agreements related to custody, access, relocation and/or child support and which may include spousal support and other financial matters, such as property issues.

BACKGROUND

~~8.11.~~ All modern Hague Family Conventions<sup>13</sup> encourage the amicable settlement of cross-border family disputes as do a number of relevant regional instruments.<sup>14</sup> Mediation and conciliation are processes expressly referred to by several of these instruments. The Hague Conference on Private International Law has in recent years undertaken considerable work to promote the use of mediation and similar means, in particular, in the context of international child abduction. This work involved the elaboration of a Guide to Good Practice on Mediation<sup>15</sup> and Principles for the Establishment of Mediation Structures.<sup>16</sup> Both promote the good practice that an agreed solution in a cross-border family dispute should be made binding and (where possible) enforceable in both / all legal systems concerned.<sup>17</sup>

~~9.12.~~ Mediation in the context of cross-border family disputes involving children and particularly in child abduction cases was also a subject given considerable attention at the Sixth Meeting of the Special Commission to review the practical operation of the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention and the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention (Part I, June 2011; Part II, January 2012). The

<sup>10</sup> This is in line with the terminology used by the General Principles and Guide to Good Practice on Transfrontier Contact concerning Children, see Hague Conference on Private International Law, Transfrontier Contact concerning Children. General Principles and a Guide to Good Practice, Bristol, Family Law (Jordan Publishing Limited), 2008 (hereinafter, “Guide to Good Practice on Transfrontier Contact”), at p. xxvi.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid.

<sup>12</sup> See “General comment No 14 (2013) on the right of the child to have his or her best interests taken as a primary consideration (art. 3, para. 1)”, by the Committee on the Rights of the Child, para. 59, available at the following address: < http://www2.ohchr.org/English/bodies/crc/docs/GC/CRC\_C\_GC\_14\_ENG.pdf > (last consulted on 13 July 2017).

<sup>13</sup> See Art. 7 of the 1980 Convention; Art. 31(b) of the 1996 Convention; Arts 6(2)(d), 34(2)(i) of the 2007 Convention and also Art. 31 of the Hague Convention of 13 January 2000 on the International Protection of Adults.

<sup>14</sup> See Recital 25 and Art. 55 e) of the Brussels IIa Regulation and Art. 51(2) d) of the EU Maintenance Regulation.

<sup>15</sup> Guide to Good Practice on Mediation (op. cit. note 8).

<sup>16</sup> “Working Party on mediation in the context of the Malta Process. Principles for the Establishment of Mediation Structures in the Context of the Malta Process”, drawn up by the Working Party with the assistance of the Permanent Bureau, November 2010 (hereinafter, “Principles for the Establishment of Mediation Structures”).

<sup>17</sup> See in particular Chapter 12 of the Guide to Good Practice on Mediation (op. cit. note 8) and Part C of the Principles for the Establishment of Mediation Structures (op. cit. note 16).

discussions revealed that rendering a mediated agreement binding and enforceable in the two or more States concerned by the case can be a complex undertaking in practice. Due to the fact that agreements drawn up to resolve a cross-border family dispute regularly touch upon a number of different subject matters that fall within the scope of different private international law instruments the legal situation is quite complex. Particularly, in the situation of a cross-border child abduction the question arose how an agreement between the taking and left-behind parent which involved not only a short term agreement on how to end the “abduction situation” but also a long term decision on matters of parental responsibility could obtain legal effect and enforceability in the two States concerned. Mediation in those cases is regularly taking place in the State to which the child has been abducted and this is the State where the parents then seek to render their agreement binding, ideally, simultaneously with ending the 1980 Convention return proceedings. The courts of that State however, lack international jurisdiction on matters of parental responsibility, at least as long as the Hague return proceedings are ongoing.<sup>18</sup> The topic was revisited at Part II of the Sixth Meeting of the Special Commission in the wider context of discussing a possible need for a simplification of recognition and enforcement of agreements in family law.

~~10.~~<sup>13.</sup> Following a Recommendation of the Sixth Meeting of the Special Commission,<sup>19</sup> the Council on General Affairs and Policy of the Conference (hereinafter, “the Council”) mandated the Permanent Bureau in 2012 to “establish an Experts’ Group to carry out further exploratory research on cross-border recognition and enforcement of agreements reached in the course of international child disputes, including those reached through mediation, taking into account the implementation and use of the 1996 Convention’ indicating that “[s]uch work shall comprise the identification of the nature and extent of the legal and practical problems, including jurisdictional issues, and evaluation of the benefit of a new instrument, whether binding or non-binding, in this area”.<sup>20</sup>

~~11.~~<sup>14.</sup> The Experts’ Group held three meetings, taking place in November 2013, December 2015 and in June 2017.<sup>21</sup> After the first meeting a Questionnaire was circulated on the subject matter and the results of which were taken into account at the second meeting. As a result of the second meeting, the Experts’ Group recommended to “further explore the development of two instruments:

- (1) a non-binding navigation tool to provide best practices on how an agreement made in the area of family law involving children can be recognised and enforced in a foreign State under the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Hague Conventions; and
- (2) a binding legal instrument that would establish a “one-stop shop” for agreements in a cross-border context pertaining to custody, access, child support and other financial arrangements (including property issues) and provide more party autonomy by giving parents the possibility of selecting an appropriate authority. The instrument would allow for the conferral of jurisdiction exclusively on one court or authority for the approval of such <sup>18</sup> See for further details on the early discussions of the matter in the course of the Special Commission, in particular, “Conclusions and Recommendations and Report of Part I of the Sixth Meeting of the Special Commission on the practical operation of the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention and the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention (1-10 June 2011)”, C&R Nos 247 et seq. (hereinafter, “C&R of Part I of the 2011 SC”) (available on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Child Abduction Section” then “Previous Special Commission meetings (1989-2012)” and “Sixth Special Commission meeting”) and paras 29-56 of the “Guide to Part II of the Sixth Meeting of the Special Commission and Consideration of the desirability and feasibility of further work in connection with the 1980 and 1996 Conventions (Annex)”, Prel. Doc. No 13 of December 2011 for the attention of the Special Commission of January 2012 on the practical operation of the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention and the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention (hereinafter, “Guide to Part II of the 2012 SC”) (available on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Child Abduction Section” then “Previous Special Commission meetings (1989-2012)” and “Sixth Special Commission meeting”).

<sup>19</sup> See “Conclusions and Recommendations of the Sixth Meeting of the Special Commission (Part II – January 2012)”, C&R No 77 (available on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Child Abduction Section” then “Previous Special Commission meetings (1989-2012)” and “Sixth Special Commission meeting”).

<sup>20</sup> See “Conclusions and Recommendations of the Council on General Affairs and Policy of the Conference (17-20 April 2012)”, C&R No 7, available on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Governance” then “Council on General Affairs and Policy”.

<sup>21</sup> See for further details on the work undertaken by the Experts’ Group the “Report of the Experts’ Group meeting on cross-border recognition and enforcement of agreements in family matters involving children (The Hague, 2-4 November 2015)”, Prel. Doc. No 5 of January 2016 for the attention of the Council of March 2016 on General Affairs and Policy of the Conference (available on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Governance” then “Council on General Affairs and Policy”) (hereinafter, “Report of the 2015 Experts’ Group Meeting”) and the “Report on the Experts’ Group meeting on cross-border recognition and enforcement of agreements in international child disputes (from 12 to 14 December 2013) and recommendation for further work”, Prel. Doc. No 5 of March 2014 for the attention of the Council of April 2014 on General Affairs and Policy of the Conference (available on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Governance” then “Council on General Affairs and Policy”) (hereinafter, “Report of the 2013 Experts’ Group Meeting”).

agreements and would provide for simple mechanisms for recognition and enforcement of the decision of that court or authority. It will build on and supplement the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Hague Conventions.”<sup>22</sup>

~~12-15.~~ In March 2016, the Council mandated the Permanent Bureau, inter alia, “to develop a non-binding ‘navigation tool’ to provide best practices on how an agreement made in the area of family law involving children can be recognised and enforced in a foreign State under the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Conventions”. The Council further concluded that it would revisit the “need for and feasibility of developing a binding instrument in this field” “based on further information which will result from the work on the navigation tool”.<sup>23</sup>

~~13-16.~~ The Experts’ Group concluded its third meeting in June 2017 with confirming “that much benefit could be gained from adding value to the existing Hague Family Conventions by developing a new binding instrument in order to facilitate family agreements in Contracting States.”<sup>24</sup>

~~14-17.~~ The Experts’ Group noted that “benefits of such an instrument include:

- enabling package agreements to be made legally enforceable in one Contracting State and then recognised and enforced in other Contracting States cost effectively;
- establishing a simplified and prompt procedure, which may include concentrated jurisdiction, to render a package agreement legally binding and enforceable in one Contracting State and for simple and prompt recognition and enforcement of the decision of that court or authority in other Contracting States;
- whilst protecting the best interests of the child, enabling party autonomy by giving parents the possibility of selecting a legal system which has a substantial connection with the child to render the agreement enforceable.”<sup>25</sup>

18. The Experts’ Group therefore recommended to the Council “to develop a new Hague Convention that would build on, and add value to, the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Hague Conventions, and be developed with a view to attracting as many States as possible.”<sup>26</sup>

~~15-19.~~ The Special Commission on the practical operation of the 1980 and 1996 Hague Conventions (10-17 October 2017) noted the “progress of the Experts’ Group on the cross-border recognition and enforcement of agreements reached in the course of family matters involving children”.<sup>27</sup>

STRUCTURE

~~16-20.~~ To start with, “Chapter I. Preliminary Considerations” briefly distinguishes legal aspects of rendering an agreement in family law legally binding and enforceable that are purely matters of domestic substantive and domestic procedural law from those that can be addressed in this explanatory note.

~~17-21.~~ “Chapter II. Subject matters addressed in agreements” lists the different substantive matters regularly addressed in agreements drawn up to settle family disputes concerning children. The Chapter also discusses which subject matters fall within the scope of which Hague Convention.

~~18-22.~~ In “Chapter III. The 1980, 1996, 2007 Hague Convention – what they offer” a brief analysis is made of what importance the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Conventions grant to agreement and to what extent they promote and respect party autonomy. In a second part, Chapter III summarises the

<sup>22</sup> Ibid.

<sup>23</sup> See “Conclusions & Recommendations of the Council on General Affairs and Policy of the Conference (15-17 March 2016)”, C&R Nos 16-18, available on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Governance” then “Council on General Affairs and Policy”.

<sup>24</sup> See Conclusions and Recommendations ~~(add-link=~~ <https://assets.hcch.net/docs/1c688fd7-631d-4bb3-9597-e2c7a975839a.pdf> >).

<sup>25</sup> Ibid.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid.

<sup>27</sup> See C&R No 52 of the Conclusions and Recommendations of the Special Commission on the practical operation of the 1980 and 1996 Hague Conventions \(10-17 October 2017\) available at the website of the Hague Conference < www.hcch.net > under “Conventions”, then 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention, then “Special Commission meetings”.

mechanisms offered by the Conventions to let the content of an agreement embodied in a decision or equivalent measure or in form of a “maintenance arrangement” “travel” cross-border.

~~19-23.~~ 23. “Chapter IV. Approaching typical cross-border family conflict situations” analyses the particularities concerning agreements made in the context of an envisaged cross-border relocation, in cross-border contact cases and in the context of international child abduction and spells out consequences resulting from the analysis made under Chapter III for these situations.

~~20-24.~~ Finally, “Chapter V” provides a checklist as well as recommendations for the preparation of agreements in cross-border family disputes involving children.

I. PRELIMINARY CONSIDERATIONS

~~24-25.~~ 25. How to best render an agreement concerning a number of different international family law matters binding and enforceable in two or more States can be a complex question in practice. There are a number of layers to this question that must be distinguished in order to allow for clarity in the discussion of the related legal problems. The responses received by the Permanent Bureau to the Expert Group Questionnaire of 2015 have revealed a certain degree of uncertainty even among specialised practitioners on how to best approach the matter. This underlines the necessity to explore the question at stake in all its facets before entering the analysis of assistance given by the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Conventions and presenting best practices.

1. Agreements in a purely national context

~~22-26.~~ To better distinguish the different layers of our topic, a brief look shall be taken at an agreement in a family dispute covering different subject matters in a purely national context.

a) Limits to party autonomy in family law

~~23-27.~~ In a purely domestic context, the first question to pose is: with regard to which subject matters does the domestic law<sup>28</sup> grant the parties party autonomy and what are the limits to party autonomy.

~~24-28.~~ A legally binding agreement, which ultimately can be rendered enforceable, presupposes that the rights and duties determined or modified by the agreement are, indeed, at the disposal of the parties. In this context it must be highlighted that parental agreements in family disputes concerning children are not simply agreements between two parties, they are agreements directly affecting a vulnerable third party: the child.

~~25-29.~~ The past decades have, without a doubt, brought about a greater importance granted to party autonomy in domestic family law as well as in international family law.<sup>29</sup> As noted by the Experts’ Group, an increased willingness can be observed in family law practice “to accept that parents are in principle best placed to order their family’s affairs, considering their children’s best interests.”<sup>30</sup> This trend is, at the same time, accompanied by a major shift in the perception of the child’s role in national and international family law induced by a number of important Human Rights and Children’s Rights treaties.<sup>31</sup> Today, children are recognised as subjects of rights and their role in proceedings has considerably changed. The change in perception is also illustrated by a change of terminology in family law: today the term “parental responsibility” has widely replaced the “rights of custody” and the term “contact rights” is used instead of “access rights” - both with the notion of better reflecting a reciprocal rights-relationship.<sup>32</sup>

<sup>28</sup> For the sake of this subchapter, it shall be assumed that the example State is one with uniform family and procedural law, i.e. not a State with different territorial units having different rules on family and procedural law.

<sup>29</sup> See also the Report of the 2015 Experts’ Group Meeting (op. cit. note 21), at para. 5, for the assessment made by the Experts’ Group.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid.

<sup>31</sup> The most important treaty in this context is without a doubt the United Nations Convention of 20 November 1989 on the Rights of the Child (hereinafter, “the CRC”) ratified by nearly all States of the world. Furthermore, a number of important regional Human Rights and Children’s Rights instruments underpin the fundamental principles set forth by the CRC. These instruments include: The African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child adopted by the Organisation of African Unity on 1 July 1990; the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (2010/C 83/02), Art. 24; the European Convention on the Exercise of Children’s Rights of 25 January 1996.

<sup>32</sup> See also, supra, under “Terminology” and then “Parental responsibility”.

~~26-30.~~ The fundamental principle that the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration in all proceedings concerning children (Art. 3 of the CRC) has been taken up and further elaborated in international and national legislation as well as in relevant case law. Furthermore, the right of the child to express his / her views in all matters concerning the child and to have these views taken into consideration in accordance with the age and maturity of the child (Art. 12 of the CRC) is given particular importance in the resolution of cross-border family disputes.

~~27-31.~~ Therefore, it is not surprising that domestic law may impose certain limits or control mechanisms when it comes to parental agreements on child related matters such as matters of parental responsibility. Such agreements might have to be validated by a judge who will verify that the agreement is not in conflict with the best interests of the child in order for the agreement to obtain legal effect. In the course of an agreement's assessment by the judge, the child, depending on age and maturity, might have to be heard.

~~28-32.~~ A comparative overview of relevant domestic law provisions clearly goes beyond what can be offered by this explanatory note. By contrast, the note can address which law or laws is/are to be considered when drafting the agreement. Inquiries into the requirements of the relevant national law(s) will then have to be made by the parties to the agreement with the assistance of their legal advisers or other sources of specialist legal advice. The Country Profiles under the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention, which address under points 19.5 and 19.6 the rendering enforceable of mediated agreements, can be a helpful source of information.<sup>33</sup> Furthermore, Central Authorities under the 1980 and 1996 Conventions as well as the so-called "Central Contact Points" created in the context of the Principles for the Establishment of Mediation Structures<sup>34</sup> could be of assistance (~~see also below under "Further steps"~~).

b) Distinguishing legal validity and enforceability

~~29-33.~~ Another matter that, in particular, lay-persons in terms of legal knowledge may not be aware of, is the differentiation between legal validity and enforceability. An agreement (or parts of it) might have immediate legal effect / legal validity, but for the enforceability a further step can be required. Sometimes, the legal validity and enforceability will be obtained simultaneously. Sometimes a matter can have legal validity but ~~not~~ never be rendered ~~be~~ enforceable.

~~30-34.~~ When one wants to be able to rely on the terms of an agreement in practice, the necessary minimum that needs to be obtained is the legal validity of the agreement. Should one of the parties to the agreement not comply with the terms, enforcement might become necessary. This requires the agreement's enforceability, which, as said, might have to be obtained through additional (procedural) steps.<sup>35</sup>

~~31-35.~~ In a purely domestic context, one would consult the domestic law to find out, what conditions must be met to produce an agreement with legal effect and what additional steps might be needed to render the agreement enforceable.

~~32-36.~~ Enforceability might be obtained by concluding the agreement before a notary or registering it with an authority. Furthermore, the approval of the agreement by a court or the inclusion of the agreement's content in a decision may be options to render the agreement enforceable. Concerning the agreement's inclusion in a court decision or court settlement several variations are conceivable. The decision or court settlement could embody the agreement as such, without a change to the wording. It could take up the essence of what was agreed but reformulate the agreement. The decision or court settlement could also take up additional matters and / or slightly vary the agreement. Furthermore, from a procedural point of view, different modi operandi are imaginable. The court's or authority's intervention could be considered of mere formal importance or the inclusion of the agreement in the decision or court settlement could be considered a decision on the merits presupposing subject matter jurisdiction.<sup>36</sup> National law greatly varies with regard to the available options.

<sup>33</sup> The Country Profiles are available on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under "Conventions" then "1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention" and "Country Profiles".

<sup>34</sup> See Part A of the Principles for the Establishment of Mediation Structures (op. cit. note 16). So far, the following nine States have established a Central Contact Point: Australia, France, Germany, Hungary, Netherlands, Pakistan, Russia, Slovak Republic and the United States of America, available on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under "Child Abduction Section" then "Cross-border family mediation" and "Central Contact Points for international family mediation".

<sup>35</sup> Besides, the enforceability of the agreement can be required when it comes to giving the agreement legal effect abroad with the help of private international law; this topic is addressed, infra, under 1.2., see paras 44-45.

~~33-37.~~ In this context it should be noted that the law of some countries grants importance to the process that accompanies the agreement's elaboration when it comes to rendering the agreement enforceable. Mediated agreements that result from a mediation conducted by a certified mediator are given a privileged status: These agreements are either automatically enforceable or can be rendered enforceable more easily in that State.<sup>37</sup>

~~34-38.~~ The explanatory note cannot give a complete overview of all mechanisms existing under national law to render agreements legally binding and enforceable. Exploring the relevant domestic substantive and procedural law requirements is a task for the parties to the agreement or respectively their legal advisers. Again, attention shall be drawn to the useful information provided in the Country Profiles under the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention.<sup>38</sup>

~~35-39.~~ It needs to be highlighted, that for different subject matters included in the agreed solution different requirements may apply to render the agreement binding and enforceable. A question that is likely to play a role should a part of the agreement require "approval" of an authority in order to obtain legal effect, is the question of partial validity of the agreement. What is envisaged by the parties should part of the agreement not obtain effect? Should the remainder of the agreement persist or is it the underlying wish of the parties to abandon the whole agreement in case of a partial invalidity. This is a matter that can be addressed in the agreement itself (see also below under Chapter V.2.f).

2. Agreements in a purely national context which later need to be rendered legally binding and enforceable abroad

~~36-40.~~ A purely national family law case can, following the dispute settlement by agreement, become a cross-border case when one of the parties moves abroad. An example is a maintenance agreement drawn up in a purely national context, which, following the debtor's relocation to another State now needs to be enforced abroad.<sup>39</sup>

~~37-41.~~ In addition to what was discussed under I.1., a number of supplementary questions are to be addressed. How can the agreement become legally binding and enforceable in the other State? Are there relevant international and / or regional or bilateral instruments in force between the two States concerned that assist in rendering the agreement enforceable abroad? If not, the autonomous rules of private international law of the State addressed will decide whether and how the agreement can be rendered enforceable in that State.<sup>40</sup>

~~42.~~ When having identified relevant rules of private international law (be it rules of an international, regional or bilateral instrument or the autonomous private international law rules) the conditions for rendering the agreement enforceable need to be identified.

~~38-43.~~ Two "methods" of rendering the agreement enforceable should be distinguished for the sake of our considerations: (A) the rendering enforceable of the agreement as such<sup>41</sup>, and (B) the rendering enforceable of the content of the agreement embodied in a decision or court settlement or similar measure.

<sup>36</sup> Obviously in international cases, subject matter jurisdiction presupposes international jurisdiction.

<sup>37</sup> For example, in Belgium, a mediated agreement resulting from a mediation conducted by a certified mediator can be homologated by the court on the request of one party only, see Art. 1733 of the Belgian "Code judiciaire". Similarly in Mexico City, when mediation is conducted by a public mediator or a private certified mediator, the mediated agreement is legally binding and enforceable, see Nuria Gonzalez-Martin, BJV, Instituto de Investigaciones Jurídicas-UNAM, 2017, pp. 129 et seq., at p. 133.

<sup>38</sup> See, supra, note 33.

<sup>39</sup> It is understood that it only makes sense to make the agreement "travel" to another legal system if its content can be executed despite the change of circumstances brought about by the relocation of one party to that legal system. For instance, contact arrangements drafted for contact between a child and parent living next door, will most likely have to be adapted should the parent move to another country.

<sup>40</sup> See also, infra, para. 51 concerning constellations in which the applicable rules of private international law do not assist in rendering the agreement binding and enforceable abroad and the agreement has to be rendered binding and enforceable "anew" in accordance with the domestic law of the second State.

<sup>41</sup> See Art. 46 of the Brussels IIa Regulation for the enforceability of agreements.

~~39-44.~~ Conditions imposed by private international law instruments to rendering an agreement as such (method A) enforceable in another State bound by the instrument, could, for example, include, that the agreement was “made”<sup>42</sup> in a State bound by the instrument and that the agreement is enforceable in the State of origin.<sup>43</sup> Furthermore, it could be that certain “safeguards” in the establishment of the agreement might have to be fulfilled.~~—For example,~~ it may be required that the child concerned by the agreement has been given an opportunity to be heard.<sup>44</sup> In addition, the rules of private international law are likely to require that the content of the agreement is not considered contrary to the public policy of the foreign State.

~~40-45.~~ With regard to method B, private international law rules will most certainly require the enforceability of the decision / court settlement in the State of origin. Furthermore, it is probable that matters of international jurisdiction play a role when it comes to considering grounds of non-recognition as well as certain “safeguards” in relation to the establishment of the decision.<sup>45</sup> ~~Recalling that~~Coming back to the above ~~in our~~ case example, the agreement was drawn up in a purely national context with all parties residing in the same State;~~—~~ it is unlikely that matters of international jurisdiction will pose a problem for the enforceability abroad of a decision embodying the agreement (provided the agreement was already embodied in the decision before the case had an international element). As a further condition, the rendering of the decision enforceable abroad will most likely presuppose that the content of the decision is not considered contrary to the public policy of the foreign State.

~~41-46.~~ The above listed conditions are, of course, mere examples. The exact test to be applied for rendering the agreement or a decision embodying the agreement enforceable will depend on the applicable private international law rules in the individual case. Again, it has to be highlighted that different subject matters included in the agreement might fall within the scope of different rules, which is why different conditions for rendering the agreement enforceable abroad could apply to different parts of the agreement.

~~42-47.~~ The explanatory note will explore which subject matters regularly contained in agreements made in the area of family law involving children fall within the scope of which Hague Convention and what this implies concerning the conditions for rendering the agreement (or its content) enforceable abroad. By contrast, the explanatory note does not address in more detail the conditions of rendering enforceable parts of the agreement that concern matters falling outside the scope of the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Hague Conventions.

3. Agreements in family disputes that have a cross-border element from the outset

~~43-48.~~ Settling an ongoing cross-border family dispute involving children by agreement and wanting to obtain for this agreement legal effect and enforceability in all States with a link to the dispute and/or its resolution is, without doubt, a challenging undertaking. When drafting the agreement all questions raised under points I.1. and I.2. have to be anticipated. But in accordance with which law or laws will these questions have to be assessed? What is the substantive law relevant to indicate whether party autonomy exists with regard to certain subject matters and what are the limits of party autonomy? Which law will determine the additional steps that might be needed to give legal validity to the content of the agreement (or respectively the part of the agreement that is not immediately valid) and to render the agreement enforceable in one State?

<sup>42</sup> Ibid.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid. For the question on how to render the agreement enforceable in the State of origin, see supra, paras 36 et seq. Obviously, if the only way to render the agreement enforceable in the State of origin, is the inclusion in a court decision, rendering the agreement enforceable in the other State can directly follow method B.

<sup>44</sup> For example, in accordance with Art. 46 of the Brussels IIa Regulation, enforceable agreements can be recognised and rendered enforceable in other EU Member States under exactly the same conditions as judgments. Art. 23 of the Regulation which is consequently also applicable to the recognition of agreements states that the recognition of a decision can be refused “if it was given, except in case of urgency, without the child having been given an opportunity to be heard, in violation of fundamental principles of procedure of the Member State in which recognition is sought”.

<sup>45</sup> See for example Art. 23 (2)(b) of the 1996 Convention in accordance with which the recognition of a measure of child protection can be refused “if the measure was taken, except in a case of urgency, in the context of a judicial or administrative proceeding, without the child having been provided the opportunity to be heard, in violation of fundamental principles of procedure of the requested State”.

What are the applicable rules of private international law that determine the requirements for cross-border recognition and obtaining enforceability abroad?

~~44-49.~~ For the drafting of a sustainable agreement in international family law, strategic thinking is required. To start with, the agreement needs to meet the requirements of validity in the legal system in which it shall first be rendered binding and enforceable. This “first” legal system should be “chosen”<sup>46</sup> wisely out of the legal systems with which the case has a connection. As an initial step, the rules of private international law of all these legal systems including the applicable international, regional or bilateral private international law instruments need to be assessed to identify the legal system most suitable to be the “starting point” with a view to rendering the agreement (or its content embodied in a decision or other measure) enforceable in all States concerned. Furthermore, the private international law rules will have to be looked at to assess the conditions they pose for the cross-border enforceability including matters of international jurisdiction (see above paras 44 and 45). These conditions may have an impact on the content<sup>47</sup> of the agreement itself and on the procedural safeguards and steps that have to be kept in mind when rendering the agreement binding and enforceable in the first State.

~~45-50.~~ Obviously, the legal situation is simplified considerably, where international or regional instruments creating uniform rules on private international law, such as the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention and the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention, are in force between the relevant States.<sup>48</sup>

~~46-51.~~ In some cases it may happen, that a cross-border recognition and enforcement with the help of private international law is impossible between the States concerned no matter which State would be used as a “starting point”. In those cases, the agreement might have to be rendered binding and enforceable anew in accordance with the domestic law in each of the States concerned. This might equally be necessary, in cases, where a State was chosen as “starting point” whose authorities are not considered to have international jurisdiction in accordance with applicable private international law rules in force in the other State. It should not be left unmentioned that in some cases using the domestic procedures to render the agreement legally binding in the two legal systems concerned can be quicker than using private international law mechanisms for recognition and enforcement.

~~47-52.~~ The explanatory note provides a strategic analysis of the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Conventions to assist in identifying the “starting point” legal system for rendering agreements on subject matters falling within these Conventions’ scope legally binding and enforceable. Furthermore, the explanatory note examines the rules for cross-border recognition and enforceability under the Hague Conventions with a view to identifying any particular conditions the agreement or respectively decision or measure embodying the agreement should fulfil.

II. SUBJECT MATTERS ADDRESSED IN INTERNATIONAL FAMILY LAW AGREEMENTS

~~48-53.~~ In this Chapter, subject matters<sup>49</sup> typically addressed in the amicable resolution of cross-border family conflicts involving children shall be explored. It shall be analysed which of these matters fall within the scope of which Hague Convention. For some of these matters, such as matrimonial property issues, no Hague Convention offering a mechanism for cross-border recognition and enforcement exists.<sup>50</sup>

<sup>46</sup> Whether an actual “choice” of this first legal system (“starting point” legal system) is possible in the individual case, will depend on the circumstances of the case. However, it should be noted that the “starting point” legal system must not necessarily be the one where mediation or a similar process is taking place; see concerning the “place” of the agreement further below under Chapter V.2.a).

<sup>47</sup> For example, the agreement should be able to pass the “public policy” test of the foreign State.

<sup>48</sup> See for up to date information on which States are Contracting States to these Conventions the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Instruments” then “Conventions”, and then when having chosen the relevant Convention under “Status table”. A complete overview of States having ratified Hague Conventions can furthermore be found on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Instruments” then “Status chart”.

<sup>49</sup> This Chapter focuses on substantive law subject matters only; no reference is made to choice of court or choice of law agreements.

<sup>50</sup> The Hague Convention of 14 March 1978 on the Law Applicable to Matrimonial Property Regimes only regulates applicable law issues and has in practice little influence since it is merely in force between 3 States. It should be noted that in a number of EU Member States two new Regulations in this area of law apply from April 2018: The Council Regulation (EU) No 2016/1103 of 24 June 2016 implementing enhanced cooperation in the area of ~~49-54.~~ It should be highlighted that the way the agreement is drafted may influence whether a particular subject may be considered as falling within the scope of a certain Convention. Furthermore, it should be noted that it can be possible for certain subject matters to fall, at the same time, within the scope of two different Conventions, i.e. be able to benefit from the recognition and enforcement mechanisms of both Conventions.

1. Parental responsibility

a) Exercise of parental responsibility including rights of custody and contact

~~50-55.~~ An agreement settling a cross-border family conflict involving children typically regulates matters of exercise of parental responsibility.<sup>51</sup> The agreement may relate to the rights of custody, determine who among the holders of parental responsibility will be the “primary carer” of the child and in which country the child will live. The agreement may regulate cross-border parent-child contact and contact with other family members. Contact can besides physical contact include contact by means of long-distance communication, such as telephone and skype.

Example: Our child, S. will move with her mother to Rome, Italy in September 2017 where they intend to habitually reside. ... She will spend the first 6 weeks of the annual summer holidays with her father and the paternal grandparents in Belgium. For all other school holidays, the following model will apply: In even years, the first half of school-holidays, S. will spend with her father, the second half with her mother. In uneven years the order switches.

...

~~51-56.~~ All the above matters fall within the scope of the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention. For the question of rendering the agreement or the content of the agreement embodied in a decision or other measures enforceable abroad with the help of the Convention, see below Chapters III and IV. Attention should be drawn to the fact that the actual enforcement in the other legal system takes place in accordance with the national law of that legal system, see Article 28 of the 1996 Convention. This also means that the agreement (embodied in the decision or other measure) must have an “enforceable content” as understood in that legal system.

b) Attribution of parental responsibility

~~52-57.~~ The agreement could furthermore address the question of attribution of parental responsibly.

Example: We hereby declare that we wish to have joint parental responsibility for our common child, S. (This could be relevant in cases where an unmarried father might not by operation of law have parental responsibility).

~~53-58.~~ This is equally a matter that falls within the scope of the 1996 Convention. For further details, see below Chapters III, 1. b).

2. Maintenance

~~54-59.~~ An agreement in a cross-border family conflict involving children is moreover likely to touch upon matters of child maintenance and, possibly, spousal or ex-spousal maintenance. When it comes to spousal or ex-spousal maintenance sometimes a differentiation from property matters can be necessary. Particularly in cases where the agreement is drawn up in the context of a separation or divorce there is a risk that matters of maintenance between ex-spouses and matters of separation of property blend into one other. Good drafting is required to make a clear distinction by giving details on the purpose the agreed provision of payment is meant to fulfil.<sup>52</sup> jurisdiction, applicable law and the recognition and enforcement of decisions in matters of matrimonial property regimes and the Council Regulation (EU) No 2016/1104 of 24 June 2016 implementing enhanced cooperation in the area of jurisdiction, applicable law and the recognition and enforcement of decisions in matters of the property consequences of registered partnerships.

---

<sup>51</sup> For the term “parental responsibility” used in this explanatory note see, supra, “Terminology” and then “Parental responsibility”.

<sup>52</sup> By way of example, the leading Court of Justice of the European Union (hereinafter, “CJEU”) decision of Van den Boogaard v. Laumen (Judgment of the 27 February 1997, C-220/95, EU:C:1997:91) shall be referred to. The CJEU had to decide whether a lump sum payment was to be considered “maintenance” in the sense of the Brussels Convention, later transformed into the Brussels I Regulation, now replaced in respect of maintenance by the EU Maintenance

Example: The father promises to transfer, on a monthly basis, a sum of 350 EUR to the account of mother (bank details:...) in order to contribute to the child related expenses. Since it is understood that the mother will not work fulltime before the child has reached the age of 2 years, the father furthermore promises to transfer an additional sum of 200 EUR monthly to the mother.

~~55-60.~~ Matters of child and spousal / ex-spousal maintenance fall within the scope of the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention. In view of the above mentioned important differentiation from property matters it can be useful if the terms of the agreement spell out that the parties consider a certain subject matter as “maintenance” falling within the scope of the 2007 Hague Convention (or, respectively, other applicable private international law instrument, such as the EU Maintenance Regulation).

3. Financing travel arrangements of regular cross-border parent-child visits

~~56-61.~~ In many cross-border family disputes furthermore the subject matter of travel costs in relation to cross-border parent-child visits is raised. In cases where one parent envisages relocating with the common child to another State, an agreement on how to “finance” the future cross-border parent-child contact can even be the condition for the other parent’s consent to relocation.

~~57-62.~~ Regulating the issue of travel-costs in parental agreements is delicate since a non-compliance with a travel-cost payment obligation may result in a factual obstruction of the cross-border contact. Difficulties in the implementation of the agreement may also arise due to the fact that the actual amount of travel costs is unknown when the agreement is concluded.

Example: The parents agree to share equally the costs for the child's annual summer holiday stay in the USA. The father undertakes to book an economy class flight ticket each year at the latest by the end of January. The mother will advance a pre-defined sum each year by 1 January to the account of the father (account details...): For the first travel booking the advanced sum will be 400 EUR. Immediately after the father booked the ticket and informed the mother of the actual price, the mother will transfer the remaining sum owed, or respectively, the father will transfer the overpaid sum. In the following years, the advance payment due by the mother will correspond to the half the actual ticket price of the previous year...

~~58-63.~~ At first glance, it may not be obvious whether travel-costs for cross-border visits could fall within the scope of the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention or within the scope of the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention. However, when considering how closely the matter of travel costs can be linked with maintaining the parent-child contact across borders, it must be asked whether a decision obliging a parent to pay or contribute to travel-costs could not be considered “modalities of contact” and as such fall under the 1996 Convention.<sup>53</sup> Consequently, whether an agreement on travel costs for cross-border visits embodied in a decision or other measure could not benefit from the recognition and enforcement mechanism offered by the 1996 Convention. After all, guaranteeing that parent-child contact across borders remains feasible in practice, means safeguarding the right of the child “[...] to maintain on a regular basis [...] personal relations and direct contacts with both parents” as enshrined in Article 10(2) of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.<sup>54</sup>

~~59-64.~~ In order to help travel-costs for cross-border visits to qualify as a part of “the exercise of parental responsibility”<sup>55</sup> in the individual case, the decision or other measure of child protection should ideally expressly note this connection. See also below under Chapter V.2.b).

---

Regulation. The Court noted that the payment would be considered maintenance if it was clear from the reasoning that it was “designed to enable one spouse to provide for himself or herself or if the needs and resources of each of the spouses [were] taken into consideration in the determination of its amount”.

<sup>53</sup> See also the Report of the 2015 Experts’ Group Meeting (op. cit. note 21), at para. 14 referring to the broad scope of the 1996 Convention.

<sup>54</sup> The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child of 20 November 1989 (hereinafter, “CRC”).

<sup>55</sup> A contribution to travel costs for parent-child contact as an obligation arising out of parental responsibility is discussed, for example, in national jurisprudence from Germany. While the German courts note that in accordance with German law the costs for the contact are normally born by the contact-parent, a few decisions indicate that, particularly in cases of expensive cross-border contact a cost contribution by the primary carer can be expected, see

~~60-65.~~ To dispel any doubts as to whether a decision or other measure embodying a travel cost agreement can benefit from the recognition and enforcement mechanism of the 1996 Convention, an application for advance recognition in accordance with Article 24 of the Convention can be recommendable.

~~61-66.~~ It might furthermore be conceivable to consider travel costs as a part of maintenance payment depending on the individual circumstances of the case and the law applicable.<sup>56</sup> For example, should it be evident from the grounds of a decision ordering a parent to bear the child's travel costs that this payment is considered part of child maintenance in accordance with the applicable law, the decision could benefit from the recognition and enforcement mechanism of the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention.

~~62-67.~~ It should be noted that it is possible for a subject matter to fall within the scope of both the 1996 Convention and the 2007 Convention at the same time.

4. Costs of education

~~63-68.~~ Particularly in cross-border family disputes involving mixed couples with different mother tongues, a major concern following a separation can be how to best guarantee that the child will continue learning both languages and maintain a close link with the cultures of both parents. Costs for relevant private or bi-lingual schooling or other language and culture related education can be considerable.

Example: The parents agree that their child S. shall attend the French school in Rome (school details: ...-); the parents will share the costs for the schooling (annual fee:...) equally. ...

~~69.~~ While the parents' education choices for their child are clearly part of the exercise of parental responsibility and thus fall within the scope of the 1996 Convention, it is not evident, whether a decision or other measures determining the parents' contribution for schooling or other education costs, equally falls within the scope of the 1996 Convention. Given the broad scope of the Convention it seems however not excluded.<sup>57</sup>

~~64-70.~~ Besides, education cost could as child related expenses fall under "maintenance" and as such within the scope of the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention.

5. Property of the child

~~65-71.~~ Agreements in cross-border family disputes involving children could in rare cases moreover touch upon matters related to the child's property.

Example: The parents agree that the immovable property of the child in State A (details ...) is to be sold. The father, who will keep his habitual residence in State A, undertakes to task a real estate agent ... The proceeds of the sale are to be transferred directly to the account of the child in State B. (Could be relevant in a relocation case.)

~~66-72.~~ The 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention applies to measures of protection that deal with the "administration, conservation or disposal of the child's property".<sup>58</sup> As the Explanatory Report points out, "[t]his very broad formulation encompasses all the operations concerned with the minor's property, including acquisitions, considered as investments or as assignments disposing of

---

OLG Brandenburg, NJW-RR 2010, 148 and OLG Nürnberg, NJW-RR 2014, 644. However, not all German courts follow this view.

<sup>56</sup> In Germany, there is jurisprudence indicating that the high expenses for contact born by one parent could be special expenses reducing that parent's net income on which the calculation of maintenance is based. Here, the travel-costs would not themselves be part of "maintenance" but would be a factor that affects the determination of the maintenance owed under German law.

<sup>57</sup> See also, supra, note 21. At least in cases, where the education costs are necessary costs to guarantee the child's link with both parents' cultures it might seem conceivable that a decision embodying an agreement on sharing education costs be considered a measure of child protection in the sense of the 1996 Convention. In this context, it shall be underlined that the CRC obliges States "to respect the right of the child to preserve his or her identity, including nationality, name and family relations" and notes that the education of a child shall be directed towards: "The development of respect for the child's parents, his or her own cultural identity, language and values, for the national values of the country in which the child is living, the country from which he or she may originate, and for civilizations different from his or her own", see Arts 8 and 29 of the CRC.

<sup>58</sup> See Art. 3(g) of the 1996 Convention.

the property transferred in consideration of the acquisition”.<sup>59</sup> The Practical Handbook details “that the Convention does not encroach on systems of property law and does not cover the substantive law relating to the content of rights over property, such as disputes in relation to ownership / title of property”.<sup>60</sup>

~~67-73.~~ It should be noted that with a view to effectively protecting the best interests of the child, the law of some States provide for certain control mechanisms when it comes to a disposal by parents over their child's property. The 1996 Convention does not affect the domestic law's choices. By contrast, once a measure of child protection concerning the disposal of the child's property is taken by a competent authority in a Contracting State, this measure will be automatically recognised in all other Contracting States.<sup>61</sup>

6. Separation of property in the context of divorce

~~68-74.~~ Agreements drawn up in the context of divorce will in addition to child related matters regularly deal with matters of property separation between the spouses. As noted above, a clear distinction should be drawn in the agreement between maintenance and property issues. As concerns agreements on the separation of property there is no Hague Convention offering a mechanism for cross-border recognition and enforcement.<sup>62</sup> Solutions may be offered by other international, regional or bilateral instruments in force between the States concerned or by the relevant autonomous private international law rules.

7. Particular subject matters relevant in international child abduction cases

~~69-75.~~ In the particular situation of cross-border child abduction, a number of additional subject matters play a role in parental agreements.

a) Return, non-return

~~70-76.~~ The subject matter of “return” or “non-return” will be the predominant topic in agreements in the context of international child abduction.

~~71-77.~~ It is important to understand exactly what the parties have in mind, when they use the term “return” and “non-return” in an agreement. It is not necessarily the same meaning these terms would have when used in Hague return proceedings.

~~72-78.~~ When “return” is ordered in proceedings under the 1980 Convention, the child is sent back to his/her State of habitual residence immediately before the abduction in order to restore the status quo ante the “abduction”. The return decision is without prejudice as to the decision on the merits of custody. Once the child is returned, the court with jurisdiction in matters of parental responsibility can decide with which parent and in which country the child will live. It is possible, that the return is followed by a lawful relocation to the State that had ordered the Hague return. As is the case with a return decision, a non-return decision in Hague proceedings is not a decision on the merits of custody even though it may lay the basis for a change of circumstances that influences the decision on parental responsibility in the future.

~~73-79.~~ When parents discuss an amicable solution in an international abduction situation they are likely to focus not only on how to remedy the immediate abduction situation but also to address the underlying family dispute (concerning custody, access and/or relocation) which escalated into the child abduction. In other words, they want to end the Hague return proceedings and, at the same time, find an agreed solution to the underlying conflict. Hence, the use of the terms “return” or

<sup>59</sup> See P. Lagarde, “Explanatory Report on the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention”, in Proceedings of the Eighteenth Session (1996), Tome II, Protection of children, The Hague, SDU, 1998, pp. 535-605, para. 25.

<sup>60</sup> See Permanent Bureau of the Hague Conference on Private International Law, Practical Handbook on the Operation of the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention, The Hague, 2014, at para. 13.72 (hereinafter, “Practical Handbook on the 1996 Convention”).

<sup>61</sup> However, the 1996 Convention “does not encroach on systems of property law and does not cover the substantive law relating to the content of rights over property”; this means, if for example, “there are requirements relating to the sale or purchase of land or buildings that are imposed by a Contracting State generally on all vendors or purchasers of certain land [...] and have nothing to do with the fact that property is being bought or sold by a child's representative, granting these authorisations for sale will not fall within the material scope of the Convention”, see further paras 13.72 et seq. of the Practical Handbook on the 1996 Convention (op. cit. note 60).

<sup>62</sup> See, supra, note 50.

“non-return” in parental agreements is likely to stipulate in which country the child is to live long term. In addition, the agreements regularly determine who will be the primary carer of the child in the long run and include a contact arrangement with the non-primary carer.

Example: We agree that our daughter S. will return to State A. with her mother on .... S. will live with her mother. S. will spend the second and fourth weekend of every month with her father. For the school holidays, the following arrangement will apply...

~~74-80.~~ All parts of the agreement relating to return or non-return implying a long-term decision of the parents to where the child will live, with whom the child will live and what might be the contact arrangements, fall within the scope of the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention.

b) Practical arrangement of return including one-time travel costs for the return

81. In international child abduction cases a number of issues surrounding the return of the child and the taking parent sometimes play an important role in the settlement of the dispute. The arrangements considered as necessary by the parents to prepare and implement the return can be manifold and are influenced by the circumstances of the individual case. Three categories of practical arrangements shall be distinguished here.

~~82. The agreement may therefore address questions, such as who will bear the travel expenses for the return, for both the child and the taking parent, and where will the child and taking parent reside immediately upon arrival.~~ First, return agreements regularly include provisions that relate to the preparation and details of the return itself, such as the date of return, the means of transport used and who pays for the required tickets.

Example: The father agrees to purchase the train ticket for daughter S. .... ~~Upon arrival, S. and her mother will reside in the old family apartment until the end of June 2017....~~

83. When a court seized with the Hague return proceedings renders a decision on return under the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention, these matters are regularly part of the decision under the 1980 Convention and are covered by the court's competence under the 1980 Convention. These matters also fall within the scope of the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention. ~~All these as they matters~~ relate to the safe return of the child to the country from which he or she was unlawfully taken. A decision or other measure embodying these matters qualifies as measure of child protection under the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention.

84. Secondly, the agreement can include provisions that relate to details surrounding the return to be implemented in the State of return, such as for example, who will pick up the child from the station / airport should the child travel alone, or, where will the child be accommodated immediately upon return. This category of provisions can also regulate with whom the child will stay and have contact immediately upon return (before a new decision on the merits of custody is in place or an agreement on this matter is rendered enforceable by the authorities with international jurisdiction). All these matters relate to securing the safe return of the child and fall within the scope of the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention.

85. Thirdly, the agreement can contain provisions surrounding the return that relate to the parent returning with the child. These are not directly covered by the Hague Conventions. The 1980 Convention focuses on the return of the child; the return of the parent cannot be ordered. The 1996 Convention deals with child protection measures only. However, this third category of practical arrangements surrounding the return may fall within the scope of the 1996 Convention if it can be argued that these arrangements are part of safeguarding the safe return of the child and can thus become part of a measure of child protection. If this is denied, the Hague Conventions cannot assist in rendering these matters binding in the State of return.

c) Criminal charges

~~75-86.~~ A very problematic issue in international child abduction cases is that of criminal charges brought against the abducting parent in the country from which the child was abducted. Particularly if imprisonment is the penalty to be expected in criminal proceedings, the fact that prosecution is ongoing or that criminal proceedings have been initiated, is likely to refrain the abducting parent from returning to that country and from traveling to that country in the future for child-parent contact. Depending on the circumstances of the case, criminal charges in the country of abduction can, if the child is to be returned to that country, lead to a complete interruption of direct contact between the taking parent and the child. This result is in contradiction to what the 1980 Convention intends to achieve and the problems in connection with criminal charges have repeatedly been discussed at Meetings of the Special Commission to review the operation of the 1980 Convention.<sup>63</sup>

~~76-87.~~ When wanting to end a dispute involving cross-border parental child abduction amicably, the topic of criminal charges regularly adds additional and sometime insurmountable difficulties. Contrary to the initiation of criminal prosecution, which could, depending on the State concerned, commence on the left-behind parent's request, the discontinuation of prosecution is in accordance with many States solely in the discretion of the authorities concerned. However, an agreement might include a left-behind parent's commitment to cooperate and take all steps possible to bring about the withdrawal of criminal charges. The latter might also be defined as a condition for the agreement to take effect. Furthermore, in cases where the law of the State provides for criminal prosecution of parental child abduction, but no steps have yet been taken to initiate prosecution, the agreement may contain a commitment of the left-behind parent to refrain from initiating of such prosecution.

Example: The father agrees to refrain from taking any steps that may lead to a criminal prosecution of the mother for child abduction. ...

~~77-88.~~ Criminal law issues fall outside the scope of the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Conventions. See for further information on how to best deal with the matter of criminal charges when trying to reach a family agreement, the Guide to Good Practice on Mediation.<sup>64</sup>

8. Other matters

~~78-89.~~ There are, of course, further matters that agreements in the area of family law involving children may address. For matters not falling within the scope of the Hague Family Conventions, solutions may be offered by other international, regional or bilateral instruments in force between the States concerned or by the relevant autonomous private international law rules.

~~79-90.~~ A group of agreements which should not be left unmentioned are parental agreements concerning disabled children having reached the age of majority. Here the Hague Convention of 13 January 2000 on the International Protection of Adults can be of assistance in making the agreement or the content of the agreement embodied in a measure of protection "travel" cross-border.

III. THE 1980, 1996, 2007 HAGUE CONVENTIONS – WHAT THEY OFFER

1. General remarks – how the Conventions respect and promote agreement and assist in making the agreement itself "travel" cross-border

~~80-91.~~ As a first step, a brief analysis shall be made of what importance the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Conventions grant to agreements and to what extent they promote and respect party autonomy.

a) The 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention

~~81-92.~~ When reading the 1980 Convention in detail, it becomes clear that the instrument is open to respect party autonomy in matters of parental responsibility, at least to a certain extent.

~~82-93.~~ First of all, the 1980 Convention expressly mentions in Article 3 the possibility that rights of custody may arise "by reason of an agreement having legal effect under the law of [the] State [in which the child was habitually resident immediately before the removal or retention]”.<sup>65</sup> The Explanatory Report notes: “In principle, the agreements in question may be simple private transactions between the parties concerning the custody of their children. The condition that they have legal effect’ according to the law of the State of habitual residence was inserted [...] in response to a desire that the conditions imposed upon the acceptance of agreements governing matters of custody which the Convention seeks to protect should be made as clear and as flexible as possible. As regards the definition of an agreement which has ‘legal effect’ in terms of a particular law, it seems that there must be included within it any sort of agreement which is not prohibited by such a law and which may provide a basis for presenting a legal claim to the competent authorities.”<sup>66</sup>

<sup>63</sup> See for example the discussions at Part I of the Sixth Meeting of the Special Commission, C&R Nos 52 et seq. of Part I of the 2011 SC.

<sup>64</sup> See Permanent Bureau of the Hague Conference, op. cit. note 8, at Chapter 2.8, paras 85 et seq.

83-94. The 1980 Convention focussing on situations of cross-border child abduction is limited in scope. Nonetheless, one should retain the Convention’s readiness to sanction a breach of custody rights arising from an agreement. All that is required is that the agreement has “legal effect” under the law of the State of habitual residence of the child immediately before the removal or retention.

84-95. At the same time, the Convention is equipped to respect a parental agreement on the moving of a child to another State. Proof can be found in the general understanding that the “left-behind parent” can consent to or acquiesce in the moving of his/her child to another State (Art. 13(1)(a)), which illustrates the Convention’s capacity to accept parental agreement to relocation.

85-96. It should be highlighted that the option of “acquiescence” to a removal or retention, is the open door to allowing for an amicable settlement of the cross-border family dispute envisaging a solution other than the return of the child to the State from where he/she was taken. As is underlined by the Guide to Good Practice on Mediation, the 1980 Convention does not limit parents when contemplating an amicable solution in a child abduction situation “to discussing the modalities of the immediate return”.<sup>67</sup> They can also decide to discuss the “possibility of a non-return, its conditions, modalities and connected issues, i.e., the long-term decision of the child’s relocation”.<sup>68</sup> As the Guide emphasises “mediation does not face the same jurisdictional restrictions as judicial proceedings”.<sup>69</sup> Article 16 of the 1980 Convention blocking jurisdiction on “the merits of custody” of courts in the State to which the child was taken does not prevent parents discussing these matters in mediation. The question to what extent Article 16 affects the modalities on how to render an agreement binding and enforceable in the two States concerned shall be addressed later (see Chapter IV.3.). What should be retained here, is that the 1980 Convention is ready to accept agreed solutions also when they envisage the non-return of the child, allowing the return-proceedings to be ended by reference to acquiescence in the sense of Article 13(1)(a).

86-97. Finally, Article 7(c) of the 1980 Convention contains a strong statement towards the encouragement of dispute resolution by agreement. The provision requests Central Authorities under the Convention “to secure the voluntary return of the child or to bring about an amicable resolution of the issues”. Many Central Authorities today provide parties with information on specialist mediation<sup>70</sup> where available and / or facilitate the access to helpful information, such as information on how an agreement can be rendered binding and enforceable in accordance with domestic law. The obligation contained in Article 7(c) applies equally in contact cases in the sense of Article 21 of the 1980 Convention, where a parent applies to the Central Authority for assistance with organising or securing the effective exercise of cross-border contact.

b) The 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention

87-98. As is the case with the 1980 Convention, the framework of the 1996 Convention supports two kinds of agreements on substantive law matters. First, agreements, which establish rights of custody in the first place, and agreements, which settle disputes on matters falling within the scope of the Convention.

<sup>65</sup> See Art. 3 of the 1980 Convention and Art. 7(2) of the 1996 Convention with the same wording.

<sup>66</sup> See E. Pérez-Vera, “Explanatory Report on the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention”, in Actes et documents de la Quatorzième session (1980), Tome III, Child abduction, The Hague, Imprimerie Nationale, 1982, at para. 70.

<sup>67</sup> See Chapter 5 “Scope of mediation in international child abduction cases” of the Guide to Good Practice on Mediation (op. cit. note 5), at para. 186.

<sup>68</sup> Ibid.

<sup>69</sup> Ibid., para. 187.

<sup>70</sup> See on the matter of specialist family mediation in international child abduction cases the Guide to Good Practice on Mediation (op. cit. note 5).

~~88-99.~~ In copying the definition of “wrongful removal or retention” of the 1980 Convention, the 1996 Convention integrates equally the notion that rights of custody can be based on an agreement having legal effect in the State of the child’s habitual residence, see Article 7(2) of the 1996 Convention.

~~89-100.~~ The 1996 Convention, however, goes a step further. The notion of attribution of parental responsibility by agreement is taken up in Article 16(2). Reading this provision in connection with Article 16(3) of the Convention, gives agreements attributing parental responsibility a much broader sphere of influence. Article 16(3) safeguards that a change of habitual residence does not lead to the loss of a person’s parental responsibility due to a different legal situation in the new country. Thus, an agreement validly attributing parental responsibility in accordance with the law of the State of the child’s habitual residence at the time when the agreement takes effect is given force in any new State of habitual residence of the child. Of course, the agreements that are enabled to “travel” cross-border by Article 16(3) are limited in scope: only an agreed attribution of parental responsibility is to be respected in the new country not including the modalities of an agreed exercise of parental responsibility.

~~90-101.~~ Turning to agreements on the exercise of parental responsibility, one could ask whether they could be considered a “measure of protection” in the sense of the 1996 Convention. The term “measures of protection” was already used in the predecessor Convention, the Hague Convention of 5 October 1961 concerning the powers of authorities and the law applicable in respect of the protection of infants. Neither the old nor the new Convention contain a definition of the term “measures of protection”, even though the 1996 Convention includes “an enumeration of the issues on which these measures might bear”.<sup>71</sup> In the light of this, considering a parental agreement on the exercise of parental responsibility a “measure of protection” might seem possible. But the overall scheme of the Convention clearly illustrates that the term “measures of protection” was meant to refer to a measure taken by “an authority” of a Contracting State, see in particular Articles 1(1)(a) and 23(1) of the 1996 Convention. A parental agreement on the exercise of parental responsibility thus requires the involvement of an “authority” before it can become a “measure of protection” in the sense of the 1996 Convention and “travel” cross-border supported by the recognition and enforcement mechanism of the Convention.<sup>72</sup> However, an “homologation” by a competent authority, could, depending on the available options in the Contracting State, suffice to create a “measure of child protection” taken by an authority.

~~91-102.~~ As concerns agreements on international jurisdiction the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention provides very limited party autonomy. The Convention centralises, with very few exceptions, jurisdiction in the authorities of the State of the child’s habitual residence. The assumption being that the authorities with proximity to the child’s habitual social and family environment are the best suited to take decisions on matters of child protection. Article 10 of the Convention allows the parents of a child, under very confined conditions, to agree that the court dealing with their divorce or legal separation may equally exercise jurisdiction on measures of child protection. As Article 10(1)(b) clarifies the choice of jurisdiction by the parents must be in the “best interests of the child”.<sup>73</sup> It is important to note that the agreed change of jurisdiction will in accordance with Article 15 of the 1996 Convention generally lead to the application of a different law, i.e., constituted an indirect choice of law.

~~92-103.~~ Like the 1980 Convention, the 1996 Convention promotes the amicable settlement of cross-border disputes concerning parental responsibility by requesting Central Authorities under the Convention to “facilitate, by mediation, conciliation or similar means, agreed solutions for the protection of the person or property of the child in situations to which the Convention applies”.<sup>74</sup>

<sup>71</sup> See P. Lagarde, op. cit. note 59, at para. 18.

<sup>72</sup> It should be noted that the Brussels IIa Regulation, a regional instrument which among EU Member States (except DK) replaces part of the 1996 Convention, goes a step further: It contains a provision that allows agreements as such to travel across borders, see Art. 46 of the Regulation.

<sup>73</sup> Wider party autonomy is possible under Art. 12(3) of the Brussels IIa Regulation based on the child having a “substantial connection” with the chosen State. Another way to widen the basis of jurisdiction through party autonomy is to ask the chosen court to request a transfer of jurisdiction to it under Art. 9 of the 1996 Convention or Art. 15 of the Brussels IIa Regulation.

<sup>74</sup> See Art. 31(b) of the 1996 Convention.

c) The 2007 Hague Child Support Convention

~~93.~~<sup>104.</sup> Among the modern Hague Family Conventions, the 2007 Hague Convention is the one that goes furthest with regard to expressly promoting and supporting agreements concerning the matters covered by the Convention.

~~94.~~<sup>105.</sup> First of all, Article 30 of the 2007 Convention provides a mechanism for recognition and enforcement of so-called “maintenance arrangements”. Article 3 of the Convention defines “maintenance arrangement” as “an agreement in writing relating to the payment of maintenance which – i) has been formally drawn up or registered as an authentic instrument by a competent authority; or ii) has been authenticated by, or concluded, registered or filed with a competent authority, and may be the subject of review and modification by a competent authority”. Included are therefore not only authentic instruments but also private agreements. Article 30(1) of the 2007 Convention requires that the maintenance arrangement be made in a Contracting State and that it is enforceable in the State of origin. The maintenance arrangement can be enforced as a decision in other Contracting States.

~~95.~~<sup>106.</sup> Contracting States to the 2007 Convention may exclude, by way of reservation, the recognition and enforcement of maintenance arrangements. However, practice shows that the majority of States joining the Convention are ready to accept the recognition and enforcement of maintenance arrangements.<sup>75</sup>

~~96.~~<sup>107.</sup> Independent of the option to recognise and enforce a maintenance arrangement by virtue of Article 30 of the 2007 Convention, the Convention provides in Article 19(1) that a “settlement or agreement concluded before or approved by [a judicial or administrative] authority” can be recognised and enforced as a decision under Chapter V of the Convention.<sup>76</sup>

~~97.~~<sup>108.</sup> When comparing agreements referred to by Article 19(1) of the 2007 Convention and those that can be recognised and enforced in accordance with Article 30 in form of “maintenance arrangements” one has to state that in practice there maybe be a minor overlap.<sup>77</sup>

~~98.~~<sup>109.</sup> As with the other Hague Family Conventions, the 2007 Convention tasks the Central Authorities to assist in bringing about an agreed solution. Article 6 (2)(d) of the Convention asks Central Authorities “to encourage amicable solutions with a view to obtaining voluntary payment of maintenance, where suitable by use of mediation, conciliation or similar processes”.

~~99.~~<sup>110.</sup> The Convention text indicates furthermore in a couple of instances, the readiness to accept party autonomy concerning jurisdiction. Given the fact that the States negotiating the Convention could not agree on a set of direct rules on jurisdiction, the option of a choice of court may not be visible at first glance. However, both, the negative rules of jurisdiction in Article 18 and the indirect rules of jurisdiction in Article 20 contain a reference to “agreement on jurisdiction”.<sup>78</sup>

<sup>75</sup> Out of the currently (status April 2017) 34 States bound by the 2007 Convention, only two made a reservation in accordance with Art. 30(8), namely Turkey and Ukraine, see the Status table available on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Child Support Section” then “Status table”. Norway and Albania, made a declaration in accordance with Art. 30(7) as a consequence of which applications for recognition and enforcement of a maintenance arrangement can only be made through Central Authorities.

<sup>76</sup> The term “settlement” as referred to by Art. 19(1) of the 2007 Convention was already included in the predecessor Hague Convention, the Hague Convention of 2 October 1973 on the Recognition and Enforcement of Decisions Relating to Maintenance Obligations. As the Explanatory Report to that Convention notes the inclusion of settlements accommodated a need in practice. The Report depicts the task to define exactly the concept of “settlement” in the instrument as perilous “since the national systems differ so much one from another” but roughly describes it as a “contract made under private law inter partes before an authority having jurisdiction – generally, a court – in order to put an end to litigation”, see M. Verwilghen, “Explanatory Report on the 1973 Hague Maintenance Conventions”, in Actes et documents de la Douzième session (1972), Tome IV, Obligations alimentaires, The Hague, Imprimerie Nationale, 1975, at paras 28–29. The 2007 Convention adds “agreements” in Art. 19(1) but this does not seem to imply an extension of scope of the Chapter on recognition and enforcement but rather a clarification, see A. Borrás & J. Degeling, with the assistance of W. Duncan & P. Lortie, “Explanatory Report on the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention”, The Hague, 2013, at para. 433 (hereinafter, “Explanatory Report on the 2007 Convention”).

<sup>77</sup> Art. 19(1) is the narrower provision: only a settlement or agreement concluded before or approved by an authority are included, while “maintenance arrangements covers a range of different situations in which a competent authority intervenes in the context of agreements relating to the payment of maintenance”, see para. 74 of the Explanatory Report on the 2007 Convention (op. cit. note 76) for further details.

<sup>78</sup> See Arts 18(2)(a) and 20(1)(e) of the 2007 Convention.

This kind of agreement is expressly not envisaged for maintenance obligations in respect of children.<sup>79</sup>

~~100-111.~~ When talking about the promotion of party autonomy through the 2007 Hague Child Protection Convention, it should not be forgotten, that the applicable law instrument created together with that Convention, namely the 2007 Hague Protocol<sup>80</sup> introduces, as a novelty,<sup>81</sup> the possibility of a choice of law for maintenance matters (even though almost completely excluded for child maintenance).<sup>82</sup> This is yet another evidence, that the matter of party autonomy was given much attention at the negotiations.

2. How can the content of an agreement embodied in a decision or other measure or respectively as “maintenance arrangement” “travel” cross-border with the assistance of the 1996 and 2007 Conventions?

~~101-112.~~ Among the three Hague Conventions in the focus of the explanatory note, only the 1996 Hague Child Protection and the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention set up recognition and enforcement mechanisms.

a) The 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention

~~102-113.~~ An agreement on any matters falling within the scope of the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention can, if embodied in a “measure of child protection” in the sense of the Convention, easily “travel” from one Contracting State to another. To benefit from the recognition and enforcement mechanism under the 1996 Convention, the measure must, as stated above, be taken by an authority of a Contracting State. The measure of child protection could be a decision taken by a court or any other measure that an authority of the Contracting State by virtue of the national procedural law is allowed to take. Recognising that the national law of States differs considerably with regard to the available “measures” of child protection and intending to be inclusive, the broad term “measures” was already used in the predecessor Convention.<sup>83</sup> Hence, it will depend on the options available in the relevant Contracting State how the agreement on matters within the scope of the Convention can be transformed into a “measure of child protection” taken by an authority.

~~103-114.~~ Once a “measure of child protection” in the sense of the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention has been obtained, this measure is recognised by operation of law in any other Contracting State to the Convention.<sup>84</sup>

~~104-115.~~ However, there are a number of grounds of non-recognition listed in Article 23(2) of the Convention, which should not be overlooked. Three of these grounds shall be given particular attention in the explanatory note.

~~105-116.~~ The first one is Article 23(2)(a) of the 1996 Convention in accordance with which the recognition of a measure can be refused if it was taken by an authority that had no international jurisdiction under the Convention. Strategically, it should therefore be a Contracting State having international jurisdiction under the 1996 Convention in which the agreement should be “transformed” into a “measure of child protection”. Since the 1996 Convention, apart from minor exceptions, “centralise[s] jurisdiction in the authorities of the State of the child’s habitual residence [to] avoid all competition of authorities having concurrent jurisdiction”<sup>85</sup>, it should generally be the

<sup>79</sup> It should be noted that the EU Maintenance Regulation which introduces comprehensive rules on jurisdiction for maintenance matters and which allows explicitly for a choice of court, also excludes agreements on jurisdiction for child maintenance.

<sup>80</sup> Hague Protocol of 23 November 2007 on the Law Applicable to Maintenance Obligations (hereinafter, the “2007 Hague Protocol”).

<sup>81</sup> See A. Bonomi, “Explanatory Report on the 2007 Hague Maintenance Obligations Protocol”, The Hague, 2013, at paras 109 and 110.

<sup>82</sup> The choice of law is not applicable for child maintenance, see Art. 8(3), unless it applies only for a particular proceeding, see Art. 7.

<sup>83</sup> See W. de Steiger, “Explanatory Report on the 1961 Hague Protection of Minors Convention”, in Actes et documents de la Neuvième session (1960), Tome IV, Protection des mineurs, The Hague, Imprimerie Nationale, 1961, at pp. 8-9.

<sup>84</sup> See Art. 23(1) of the 1996 Convention.

<sup>85</sup> See P. Lagarde, op. cit. note 59, at para. 37. See also Art. 5 of the 1996 Convention.

Contracting State of habitual residence of the child where the measure of child protection should be obtained.<sup>86</sup> It must be highlighted that “[t]he authority of the requested State is bound by the findings of fact on which the authority of the State where the measure was taken based its jurisdiction”.<sup>87</sup> The particularities of international child abduction cases are further explored below, see Chapter IV, 2. c).

~~106-~~117. The second ground of non-recognition that may play a role in the recognition of a measure of child protection embodying a parental agreement is Article 23(2)(b) of the 1996 Convention. The provision states that the recognition of the measure of child protection can be refused if “the measure was taken, except in a case of urgency, in the context of a judicial or administrative proceeding, without the child having been provided the opportunity to be heard, in violation of fundamental principles of procedure of the requested State”. As the Explanatory Report points out this ground for refusal is “directly inspired by Article 12, paragraph 2, of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child”.<sup>88</sup> The Explanatory report further clarifies that this provision does not imply a necessity to hear the child in every case. The report states “that it is not always in the interest of the child to have to give an opinion, in particular if the two parents are in agreement on the measure to be taken. It is only where the failure to hear the child is contrary to the fundamental principles of procedure of the requested State that this may justify a refusal of recognition”. For the explanatory note, it should be noted that “hearing the voice of the child” can be a subject matter of importance when it comes to the recognition of a measure of child protection. The topic is further discussed below under Chapter V, 2. e).

~~107-~~118. The third ground of non-recognition to be highlighted is Article 23(2)(d) of the 1996 Convention, which states that the recognition of the measure can be refused “if such recognition is manifestly contrary to public policy of the requested State, taking into account the best interests of the child”. When drafting the agreement (which later is meant to be turned into a measure of child protection) one must consider whether the agreement’s content is likely to create public policy constraints in the State in which recognition and enforceability is to be achieved. The weight given to the “best interest of the child” in the assessment of whether the measure’s recognition would be contrary to public policy, is yet another incentive to consider the child’s perspective when drafting the agreement. See further below under Chapter V, 2. d).

~~108-~~119. To dispel any doubts about possibly existing grounds of non-recognition, any interested person can request advance recognition in accordance with Article 24 of the 1996 Convention. For the measure of child protection to become enforceable in the other State a declaration of enforceability in accordance with Article 26 of the Convention has to be obtained.

b) The 2007 Hague Child Support Convention

~~109-~~120. If an agreement on maintenance matters falling within the scope of the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention is embodied in a decision or court-settlement or is concluded before or approved by an authority (Art. 19(1) of the Convention), it benefits from the recognition and enforcement mechanism of the Convention. However, as a condition, the involved authority must base its jurisdiction on one of the listed “indirect grounds of jurisdiction” in Article 20(1). It should be noted that Contracting States may make reservations regarding some of these “bases of jurisdiction”, see Article 20(2) of the Convention. Strategically, it is, as a general rule, safest to have a decision rendered in a State whose authorities have international jurisdiction in accordance with Article 20(1)(a), (b) or (d)<sup>89</sup>, since Contracting States cannot make a reservation with regard to these grounds of jurisdiction.

<sup>86</sup> See paras 13.49-13.50 of the Practical Handbook on the 1996 Convention (op. cit. note 60).

<sup>87</sup> See Art. 25 of the 1996 Convention.

<sup>88</sup> See P. Lagarde, op. cit. note 59, at para. 123.

<sup>89</sup> In accordance with Art. 20 (1)(a), (b) and (d) a “decision made in one Contracting State (“the State of origin”) shall be recognised and enforced in other Contracting States if –

a) the respondent was habitually resident in the State of origin at the time proceedings were instituted;

b) the respondent has submitted to the jurisdiction either expressly or by defending on the merits of the case without objecting to the jurisdiction at the first available opportunity;
[...];

d) the child for whom maintenance was ordered was habitually resident in the State of origin at the time proceedings were instituted, provided that the respondent has lived with the child in that State or has resided in that State and provided support for the child there; [...].”

~~110.~~121. Among the grounds of non-recognition contained in Article 22 particular attention shall be drawn to Article 22(a) which states that the recognition and enforcement of the decision can be refused if it “is manifestly incompatible with the public policy (“ordre public”) of the State addressed”. As said above, when drafting the agreement it should be considered whether the agreement’s content is capable of passing the “public policy” of the foreign State in which recognition and enforceability will be sought. See also below under Chapter V, 2. d).

~~111.~~122. For the recognition and enforcement of a “maintenance arrangement” in the sense of Article 3(e) of the 2007 Convention generally the same provisions apply as for decisions, see Article 19(4) of the Convention. However, Article 30 modifies these rules slightly. In particular, the grounds of non-recognition are not the same, see Article 30(4) of the Convention. It is important to note that the indirect rules of international jurisdiction of the Convention do not play a role for the recognition and enforcement of maintenance arrangements. But, also maintenance arrangements have to “pass” the same public policy test as decisions.

IV. APPROACHING TYPICAL CROSS-BORDER FAMILY CONFLICT SITUATIONS

~~112.~~123. This Chapter analyses the particularities concerning agreements made in the context of an envisaged cross-border relocation, in cross-border contact cases and in the context of international child abduction and spells out consequences resulting from the assessment made in Chapter III for these situations.

1. Agreements in the context of cross-border relocation

~~113.~~124. The term cross-border relocation is understood as referring to situations where one parent moves abroad with his/her minor child(ren) envisaging to establish the habitual residence in the State of relocation. Only lawful relocation is meant here, not the taking of a child to another State in breach of custody rights (these situations are referred to below under “International child abduction”).

~~114.~~125. Besides the actual consent to the relocation, a parental agreement in the context of cross-border relocation is likely to address, contact arrangements and other matters of exercise of parental responsibility. Furthermore, the agreement might deal with matters of child and spousal/ex-spousal maintenance, travel costs and education costs.<sup>90</sup>

~~115.~~126. All subject matters falling within the scope of the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention, can if contained in a “measure of child protection” taken by an authority in a Contracting State having international jurisdiction, benefit from the efficient recognition and enforcement mechanism of the Convention. Recalling that the 1996 Convention centralises international jurisdiction in the State of habitual residence of the child, it is this State in which the parents should approach the authorities to obtain a “measure of child protection” based on their agreement. Depending on the options available in the relevant Contracting State the agreement could be turned into a consent-order or be otherwise included in a decision. It might suffice that the agreement is registered with or homologated by a competent authority. Once the parents have obtained a “measure of child protection”, this measure is, by operation of law recognised in all other Contracting States. To dispel any doubt concerning possibly existing grounds of non-recognition, advance recognition can be requested in accordance with Article 24 of the Convention.

~~116.~~127. As concerns matters falling within the scope of the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention, two avenues can be followed to use the Convention’s recognition and enforcement mechanism.

~~117.~~128. Firstly, the agreement could be included in a decision or court settlement, or has been concluded before or approved by an authority of a Contracting State in the sense of Article 19(1) of the 2007 Convention. The Contracting State chosen should have international jurisdiction on the subject matter in the light of the indirect rules of jurisdiction under the 2007 Convention.

<sup>90</sup> See for the subject matters typically contained in agreements made in international family disputes concerning children above Chapter II.

Here, also possible reservations, that Contracting States concerned by the individual case may have made, must be considered. To be on the safe side, international jurisdiction should be based on the grounds of jurisdiction referred to in either Article 20(1)(a), (b) or (d) of the 2007 Convention, because no reservation is possible concerning these grounds.

~~118-129.~~ Secondly, the agreement could be rendered enforceable abroad as a maintenance arrangement, Article 30 of the 2007 Convention. This presupposes that the agreement is drawn up or registered as an authentic instrument or that it has been authenticated by, or concluded, registered or filed with a competent authority in the sense of Article 3(e) of the 2007 Convention. Attention has to be drawn to the fact that Article 30 cannot be used between all Contracting States to the Convention since a reservation is possible.<sup>91</sup> Furthermore, it has to be highlighted that not all legal systems know the concept of “authentic instruments” or other kinds of “maintenance arrangements” as described in Article 3(e) of the Convention. It might therefore not be possible to produce such an arrangement in each Contracting State. By contrast, also States not knowing such maintenance arrangements in their own system will, unless they made a reservation under Article 30(8), have to recognise and enforce the maintenance arrangements of other Contracting States.

~~119-130.~~ The recognition and enforcement of maintenance arrangements under the 2007 Convention follows principally the same rules as the recognition and enforcement of decisions, see Article 19(4). However, Article 30 slightly modifies these rules. Of particular importance in our context is the different set of grounds of non-recognition that applies to maintenance ~~agreements~~ arrangements. While, as stated above, the recognition of a decision founded on a ground of jurisdiction not supported by the indirect rules of jurisdiction of the Convention can be refused, for maintenance arrangements international jurisdiction does not play a role. Consequently, a maintenance arrangement from any given Contracting State can benefit from the recognition and enforcement mechanism under the Convention.

~~120-131.~~ After analysing the mechanisms offered by the 1996 and 2007 Conventions the following conclusions can be drawn for an agreement on cross-border relocation.

~~121-132.~~ First of all, it should be emphasised that should the relocation agreement only deal with matters falling within the scope of the 1996 Convention, the agreement could very easily travel cross-border with the help of this Convention. Likewise, should the agreement drawn up in the context of the relocation only deal with matters falling within the scope of the 2007 Convention, this Convention offers efficient mechanisms for cross-border recognition and enforcement. Complexity is added when the agreement made in the context of relocation is a so-called “package agreement”.<sup>92</sup>

~~122-133.~~ For all matters of the package agreement falling within the scope of the 1996 Convention, the ideal “starting point” legal system to first render the agreement binding and enforceable is the State of the current habitual residence of the child. In this State, the agreement would have to be integrated into a “measure of child protection” in the sense of the Convention. This measure would then by operation of law be recognised in all other Contracting States. How the agreement can be included in or be transformed into a “measure of child protection” in the State of the habitual residence of the child will depend on that State’s law.

~~123-134.~~ As concerns matters in the agreement falling within the scope of the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention, the State of current habitual residence of the child is equally a good “starting point” legal system to first render the agreement enforceable. Should the agreement be embodied in a decision or court-settlement or approved by an authority in the sense of Article 19(1) of the Convention, international jurisdiction founded on grounds referred to in Article 20(1)(a), (b) or (d) of the 2007 Convention would be the safe options: namely seizing the court in the country of the habitual residence of the respondent<sup>93</sup> (i.e. here the debtor, who is the respondent for the

<sup>91</sup> Ibid., Art. 30(8).

<sup>92</sup> See for the term “package agreement” the “Terminology” above.

<sup>93</sup> It must be noted that Art. 20(1)(a), (b) and (d) refers to the term “respondent” (and not to the “debtor” for the purpose of Art. 10(1) applications and the “creditor” for the purpose of Art. 10(2) applications). In view of the fact that Art. 20 also applies to agreements concluded before or approved by a competent authority in the sense of Art. 19(1) i.e. in cases where no proceedings against a “respondent” were brought, the term “respondent” does not fit perfectly. By way of teleological interpretation, Art. 20 could, however, be read to refer to the “respondent” for the purpose of the recognition and enforcement procedure under Chapter V of the Convention, which for a maintenance claim would be the debtor. As the very minimum, one should be able to apply Art. 20(1)(b) to cases where both parties have purpose of the recognition and enforcement procedure under Chapter V of the Convention), having the respondent<sup>94</sup> submit to the jurisdiction, or seizing the court in the country of habitual residence of the child given the respondent<sup>95</sup> has lived with the child in that State or has resided in that State and provided support for the child there.

~~124.~~<sup>135.</sup> Should the law of that State know the concept of “maintenance arrangements” as defined in Article 3 of the 2007 Convention, the relevant steps could be taken to obtain such a maintenance arrangement. The maintenance arrangement could then be rendered enforceable with the help of the Convention in all Contracting States, independent of rules on international jurisdiction for maintenance.

~~125.~~<sup>136.</sup> Summarising it can be stated that, in principle, it would be feasible to give force to a relocation agreement including provisions on maintenance with the assistance of the 1996 and 2007 Conventions in all Contracting States when the “starting point” legal system is the legal system of habitual residence of the child and one of the grounds of jurisdiction referred to in Article 20 of the 2007 Convention is applicable or the parties have entered into a valid “maintenance arrangement” in terms of Articles 3(e) and 30 of the 2007 Convention.

~~126.~~<sup>137.</sup> Whether in practice the rendering of a relocation agreement, including provisions on maintenance, legally binding and enforceable in the above identified “starting point” jurisdiction is an easy or cumbersome process, depends to a large extent on the procedural law of the relevant Contracting State. The process can be costly and time consuming. And it may be that the authorities competent to render a measure of child protection in the sense of the 1996 Convention and those competent to render a decision or court-settlement on matters of maintenance or respectively approve an agreement or make a maintenance arrangement under the 2007 Convention are different authorities. The parties may therefore have to turn to two different authorities, which can also have cost implications.

~~127.~~<sup>138.</sup> Obviously, where the agreement includes matters<sup>96</sup> not falling within the scope of the 1996 and 2007 Conventions or where these Conventions are not in force<sup>97</sup> between the relevant States, the task of rendering the agreement legally binding and enforceable in all States concerned is more challenging.

~~128.~~<sup>139.</sup> In the best of cases, the 1996 and the 2007 Convention are in force between all States concerned by the dispute, all matters treated in the agreement fall within the scope of either Convention and the same authority in the “starting point” legal system is competent under both to give the necessary force to the agreement under both Conventions. To complete the “best case scenario”, the competent authority acts expeditiously and free of charge or imposes reasonable charges only.<sup>98</sup>

2. Agreements in cross-border contact cases

~~129.~~<sup>140.</sup> The category of cases considered in this sub-chapter are those where one holder of parental responsibility lives in a country other than the country of habitual residence of the child and other parent. Disputes can arise in such cases for example, if one of the parent’s wishes to alter the contact arrangement or if the primary carer obstructs the contact.

~~130.~~<sup>141.</sup> A dispute could, however, also arise concerning matters of maintenance. Even though the right to maintenance and contact rights are legally two distinct issues, in practice, it is submitted to the jurisdiction of the court by seeking a consent order, all the more if all parties are habitually resident in the country of jurisdiction.

---

<sup>94</sup> Ibid.

<sup>95</sup> Ibid.

<sup>96</sup> This may, for example, be the case if the agreement on relocation is made in conjunction with a divorce and the parents also address matters of separation of matrimonial property in their agreement. See further above under Chapter II. Of course, the 1996 and 2007 Conventions can for all matters falling within their scope always be used to give partial force to the agreement in all Contracting States. As for the other matters, relevant rules on private international law will have to be identified, see supra, paras 48 et seq.

<sup>97</sup> The considerable advantages offered by the 1996 and 2007 Conventions in making agreements or their content “travel” cross-border have been demonstrated in this explanatory note. States that have not yet joined the 1996 Convention and / or 2007 Convention should be encouraged to do so.

<sup>98</sup> It could be helpful if States were to consider the development of good practices with a view to achieving the described “best case scenario”.

not rare that a delay in maintenance payment brings about difficulties in the implementation of contact arrangements and vice versa.

~~131.~~<sup>142.</sup> The legal setting discussed in the sub-chapter on cross-border relocation is nearly the same. The difference is that the child and one parent habitually reside in one State and the other parent habitually resides in another. Assuming both, the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention and the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention are in force between all States concerned by the dispute, the following advice for contact agreements including a maintenance component can be given. The ideal “starting point” jurisdiction for rendering agreements on matters falling within the 1996 Convention legally binding and enforceable is the State of habitual residence of the child. If it is possible to establish in that State an enforceable “maintenance arrangement” in the sense of the 2007 Convention, this might be the ideal option to choose concerning any parts of the agreement that concern maintenance, provided none of the States concerned has made a reservation in accordance with Article 30(8) of the 2007 Convention. Otherwise, the parts of the agreement concerning maintenance must be made part of a decision or court-settlement or the agreement must be concluded before or approved by an authority in the sense of Article 19(1) of the 2007 Convention. Doing so in the State of habitual residence of the child, i.e. not the State of habitual residence of the debtor, could be based on the grounds of jurisdiction contained in Article 20(b).

~~132.~~<sup>143.</sup> Obviously, cross-border contact agreements that deal with matters falling within the scope of the 1996 Convention only, can easily travel cross-border with the help of this Convention among all Contracting States.

3. International child abduction (return and non-return agreement)

~~133.~~<sup>144.</sup> In the situation of international child abduction, the factual situation differs from that of an envisaged cross-border relocation in many regards. First of all, the dispute is likely to be more conflictual and an amicable solution often difficult to obtain. Furthermore, the time pressure in these cases is much higher. Return proceedings under the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention are expeditious proceedings; decisions are to be rendered within a few weeks time only. Any process to bring about an amicable resolution of the disputes has to comply with the tight timeframe.<sup>99</sup> A possible criminal prosecution in the State of abduction complicates the resolution of the dispute.<sup>100</sup>

~~134.~~<sup>145.</sup> In international child abduction cases particular rules of international jurisdiction in matters of parental responsibility apply in accordance with the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention and the 1996 Hague Child Protection Convention. The Conventions are premised on the notion that the most appropriate forum to determine the long-term merits of custody is usually the State of the habitual residence of the child. The child’s removal to or retention in another State by one parent in breach of the other parent’s custody rights should not bring about a change of jurisdiction. The 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention provides that as long as Hague return proceedings are ongoing, the courts in the State to which the child was taken cannot decide on the merits of custody, see Article 16. The 1996 Convention, reinforcing the 1980 Convention, provides that the international jurisdiction for matters falling within the scope of the 1996 Convention remains with the authorities of the State where the child, immediately before the abduction, habitually resided until the conditions noted in Article 7 of the 1996 Convention are met. For a change of international jurisdiction in accordance with Article 7, the child must have “acquired a habitual residence in another State” and “a) each person, institution or other body having rights of custody has acquiesced in the removal or retention;” or “b) the child has resided in that other State for a period of at least one year after the person, institution or other body having rights of custody has or should have had knowledge of the whereabouts of the child, no request for return lodged within that period is still pending, and the child is settled in his or her new environment”.

~~135.~~<sup>146.</sup> The particularities of the factual and legal situation in international child abduction cases may complicate the matter of rendering agreements settling the family dispute legally binding and enforceable in all States concerned.

<sup>99</sup> See for the particular challenges for mediation in international child abduction cases Chapter 2 of the Guide to Good Practice on Mediation (op. cit. note 8).

<sup>100</sup> See, supra, at paras 86-88.

a) Return agreement

Example case: Hague return proceedings are ongoing in State A. The parents having followed specialised mediation have worked out a detailed agreement in accordance with which the child and mother (taking parent) are to return to the State from which the child was taken (State B). The child will from now on live with the mother as primary carer in State B, the father will have regular contact with the child in accordance with a detailed contact arrangement and the child will continue to see the maternal family in State A during summer holidays. The 1980 and 1996 Conventions are in force between State A and State B.

~~136-147.~~ The court seised with the Hague return proceedings can conclude the return proceedings by consent but the court does not have international jurisdiction to render a decision on the merits of custody and contact. This international jurisdiction remains with the authorities in State B, in accordance with Article 7 of the 1996 Convention, supported by Article 16 of the 1980 Convention.

~~137-148.~~ Article 11 of the 1996 Convention, which, in cases of urgency, grants jurisdiction for measures of protection to the authorities of any Contracting State in whose territory the child is present cannot assist in rendering the agreement fully binding in State A in our example case. Article 11 may play a role in the context of return proceedings when it comes to ensure the safe return of the child with certain measures of protection.<sup>101</sup> This may include appointing the mother as provisional sole primary carer of the child, and giving provisional force to a contact arrangement with the father. However, the measures taken in accordance with Article 11 are, by nature, “temporary measures” and “lapse as soon as the authorities which have jurisdiction under Articles 5 to 10 [of the 1996 Convention] have taken the measures required by the situation”.<sup>102</sup> Hence, a court with jurisdiction under Article 11 of the 1996 Convention cannot in a binding way implement long-term arrangements for custody and contact. The provisional order is only effective until the competent authority in State B takes over. It is for the competent authority in State B to decide whether or not to give binding effect to the parties’ agreement concerning custody and contact. Besides, the use of Article 11 presupposes a situation of “urgency”<sup>103</sup> making the measures of protection necessary.

~~138-149.~~ Should the court seised with the Hague return proceedings in State A nonetheless include the full terms of the agreement in its decision, the authorities in other Contracting States to the 1996 Convention would be under no obligation to recognise the decision with regard to custody and contact, see the ground for non-recognition Article 23(2)(a) of the 1996 Convention.

~~139-150.~~ The ideal “starting point” legal system to render the agreement on custody and contact legally binding and enforceable with the help of the 1996 Convention is State B (i.e., the State of habitual residence of the child immediately before the wrongful removal or retention). However, as discussed at the Sixth Meeting of the Special Commission, the court “dealing with the custody issues in State B ... is not under a Convention obligation to deal with the case expeditiously (in contrast to the court seised with the return proceedings in State A). Even though courts in many States tend to deal with custody matters in a speedy way, the processes in State B may be too lengthy to keep the return proceedings under the 1980 Convention in State A pending”.<sup>104</sup> Furthermore, certain additional practical impediments may make it difficult to obtain the measure of child protection in State B while the abduction situation is not solved. The authorities in State B may request the presence of both parties in court and may wish to interview<sup>105</sup> the child.

~~140-151.~~ To assist the parties in this complex situation and to make best use of the interplay of the 1996 and 1980 Conventions, the use of direct judicial communications is highly recommended.<sup>106</sup> The International Hague Network of Judges<sup>107</sup> has around 124 members from 81

<sup>101</sup> See for details Chapter 6 of the Practical Handbook on the 1996 Convention (op. cit. note 55).

<sup>102</sup> See Art. 11(2) of the 1996 Convention.

<sup>103</sup> See concerning the restrictive interpretation of the term “urgency”, supra, note 101.

<sup>104</sup> Guide to Part II of the 2012 SC, op. cit. note 15, at para. 48.

<sup>105</sup> Of course, depending on the circumstances, a video hearing of the child might be possible replacing the child’s presence in State B.

<sup>106</sup> See for further details: Permanent Bureau of the Hague Conference on Private International Law, Brochure on Direct Judicial Communications, The Hague, 2013, available on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Child Abduction Section” and “Draft document to inform lawyers and judges about direct judicial communications, in specific cases, within the context of the International Hague Network of Judges”, Preliminary legal systems (status May 2017) who assist in establishing direct judicial communications. As explained by the Hague Conference Brochure on Direct Judicial Communications, “[t]here are two main communication functions exercised by members of the Network. The first communication function is of a general nature (i.e., not case specific). It includes the sharing of general information from the International Hague Network or the Permanent Bureau with his or her colleagues in the jurisdiction and assisting with the reverse flow of information. [...] The second communication function consists of direct judicial communications with regard to specific cases, the objective of such communications being to address any lack of information that the competent judge has about the situation and legal implications in the State of the habitual residence of the child. In this context, members of the Network may be involved in facilitating arrangements for the prompt and safe return of the child, including the establishment of urgent and / or provisional measures of protection and the provision of information about custody or access issues or possible measures for addressing domestic violence or abuse allegations. These communications will often result in considerable time savings and better use of available resources, all in the best interests of the child.”<sup>108</sup> Where the parties in a cross-border child abduction case have concluded an agreement on return, direct judicial communications can assist in securing that the agreement is rendered legally binding in the State of return in a speedy way.

~~141.~~<sup>152.</sup> For matters of maintenance falling within the scope of the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention as in force between State A and State B, the abduction situation does not bring about a situation of blockage of jurisdiction. Given the authorities of State A have, in accordance with their rules,<sup>109</sup> international jurisdiction on matters of maintenance, they could for example render a decision reproducing the terms of the agreement on maintenance. The decision would be recognisable and enforceable in State B provided the grounds of jurisdiction used in State A constitute a bases for recognition and enforcement in accordance with Article 20 of the 2007 Convention is given. Should the laws of State A offer the possibility to establish a “maintenance arrangement” in the sense of Article 3(e) of the 2007 Convention, Article 30 of the Convention could be used to give the agreed terms on maintenance legal effect in State B. This option is independent of considerations of international jurisdiction.

b) Non-return agreement

Example: Hague return proceedings are ongoing in State A. The parents having followed specialised mediation have worked out a detailed agreement in accordance with which the child and mother (taking parent) are not to return to the State from which the child was taken (State B). The child will from now on live with the mother as primary carer in State A, the father will have regular contact with the child in accordance with a detailed contact arrangement and the child will regularly travel to State B. The 1980 and 1996 Conventions are in force between State A and State B.

~~142.~~<sup>153.</sup> Rendering the above non-return agreement fully binding and enforceable for both States concerned will almost certainly require an involvement of the authorities in State B, at least if the parties want to give immediate force to the entire agreement at the moment the Hague return proceedings are concluded.

~~143.~~<sup>154.</sup> The authorities of State A do not have international jurisdiction on the merits of custody and contact while the Hague return proceedings are ongoing, Article 16 of the 1980 Convention and Article 7 of the 1996 Convention.

~~144.~~<sup>155.</sup> Once the return proceedings come to an end as a result of the parents’ agreement that the child is to remain in State A, the blockage of jurisdiction in Article 16 of the 1980 Convention ceases to exist. This however, does not lead to an automatic shift of jurisdiction on matters of custody and contact from State A to State B. Only if the cumulative conditions of Article 7 of the 1996 Convention are met, can the jurisdiction shift. This presupposes that the habitual residence of the child has changed to State A.

---

[Document for the attention of the Seventh Meeting of the Special Commission on the practical operation of the 1980 Child Abduction Convention and of the 1996 Child Protection Convention – October 2017, available at the website of the Hague Conference < \[www.hcch.net\]\(http://www.hcch.net\) > under “Conventions”, then 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention, then “Special Commission meetings”.](#)

<sup>107</sup> See for details the list of members of the International Network of Judges available on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Child Abduction Section”.

<sup>108</sup> See Permanent Bureau of the Hague Conference, op. cit. note 106, p. 7.

<sup>109</sup> In EU States these would be the jurisdiction rules contained in the EU Maintenance Regulation.

~~145.~~156. Should the conditions of Article 7 for a shift of jurisdiction not immediately be given, as discussed at the Sixth Meeting of the Special Commission, “a transfer of jurisdiction from State B to State A in accordance with Article 8 or, more usually, Article 9 of the 1996 Convention could be sought to render the agreement binding in State A by court order”.<sup>110</sup> However, the court in State B deciding on the transfer of jurisdiction is not under an obligation to deal with the matter expeditiously. Besides, in view of the necessary exchange that is to take place between the authorities in State A and State B to arrange for the transfer and knowing that not all authorities use responsive means of communication such as email, the process of transfer of jurisdiction can in itself be time-consuming. Again, the potential advantages of the use of direct judicial communications, to assist in speeding up the process should be noted.<sup>111</sup>

~~146.~~157. Against this background, and to benefit most from the interplay between the 1996 and 1980 Conventions the same steps as suggested above in paragraph 150, i.e. taking the agreement to the competent authorities of State B to transform it into a “measure of protection” there should be considered.

~~147.~~158. Problems may arise where the process in State B will not be speedy enough to keep the Hague return proceedings in State A pending until the “measure of child protection” in State B is obtained. As stated above an additional “practical impediment to pursuing the suggested option of going back to State B may be that the court in State B, seised to turn the parental agreement on custody and contact issues into a court order, may request the presence of both parties in court and may wish to interview the child”.<sup>112</sup> As noted in the Special Commission discussions, “due to the interdependence of the terms of the agreement, it is not a satisfactory solution to terminate the return proceedings in accordance with the agreement without rendering the remainder of the agreement on the long-term custody issues legally binding and enforceable”.<sup>113</sup>

~~148.~~159. For agreements on matters of maintenance, see above paragraph 152.

---

<sup>110</sup> Guide to Part II of the 2012 SC, op. cit. note 18, at para. 47.

<sup>111</sup> See, supra, para. 151.

<sup>112</sup> Guide to Part II of the 2012 SC, op. cit. note 18, at para. 49.

<sup>113</sup> Ibid.

V. CHECKLIST FOR RENDERING AN AGREEMENT LEGALLY BINDING AND ENFORCEABLE IN THE STATES CONCERNED & RECOMMENDATIONS FOR THE PREPARATION OF AGREEMENTS

1. Checklist

- What are the subject matters that are (to be) covered by the agreement?
- With which States does the conflict have a connection and with which States will the agreement, once implemented, have a link?
- With regard to which subject matter must the agreement be legally binding and enforceable in which State(s)?
- Which private international law instruments with importance for the subject matters covered by the agreement are in place between the States concerned? And, in particular, are the 1980, 1996 and / or 2007 Hague Conventions in force between the States concerned? <sup>114</sup>
- In which legal system should the agreement first be rendered legally binding and enforceable with a view to giving it cross-border effect and enforceability in (as many of) the legal system(s) concerned (as feasible) with the help of the above identified instruments of private international law?
- Are civil legal proceedings concerning (some) matters covered by the agreement currently ongoing in one or more States? What does the agreement envisage for these proceedings? Do the ongoing proceedings affect the choice of the legal system, in which the agreement shall first be rendered legally binding and enforceable?

Once the private international law rules are identified that shall enable the agreement to “travel” cross-border and become enforceable abroad, and once the legal system is identified in which the agreement shall first be rendered legally binding and enforceable, the following questions will have to be answered:

- In the first State, what are the conditions for the agreement to become legally binding and enforceable in that State? What are the substantive law rules in that State applicable to the subject matter(s) covered by the agreement and what limits to party autonomy do they foresee? Which steps are needed to render the agreement binding and enforceable? If there are different ways to render the agreement (or its content) enforceable, which one will allow the agreement to “travel” cross-border most easily in accordance with the applicable private international law rules?
- What are the conditions for the cross-border recognition and enforceability of the agreement imposed by the private international law rules in force in the addressed State? What does this imply for the content of the agreement, the process followed and steps taken in the first legal system?
- What conditions does the domestic law of the potential State(s) of enforcement impose concerning the content of the agreement for it to be considered as having an “enforceable content”? For example, are the provisions of a contact arrangement sufficiently precise to be enforced by the authorities in the State of enforcement?

Further questions may arise, depending on the circumstances and legal situation of the individual case:

- In international child abduction cases, are criminal proceedings ongoing / initiated in one of the States concerned? Does this effect the implementation of the agreement?

<sup>114</sup> See for up to date information on which States are Contracting States to these Conventions the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Instruments” then “Conventions”, and then when having chosen the relevant Convention under “Status table”. A complete overview of States having ratified Hague Conventions can furthermore be found on the Hague Conference website at < www.hcch.net > under “Instruments” then “Status chart”.

- If only part of the agreement can be rendered legally binding and enforceable, what are the consequences? What is envisaged by the parties? What are the risks of implementing the agreement nonetheless (in particular with regard to the child)?

2. Recommendations for the preparation of agreements

~~149~~.160. Objective: The agreement settling a cross-border family dispute involving children shall obtain legal effect in all States concerned by the agreement and ideally be (rendered) enforceable in all related legal systems.<sup>115</sup>

~~150~~.161. Answers to the above checklist questions require an analysis of the legal situation in the individual case.

~~151~~.162. In the following, a number of recommendations shall be given for the preparation of the agreement.

a) “Place” of the agreement and choice of process accompanying the amicable settlement of the dispute

~~152~~.163. In contrast to decisions, which are made by an authority of a certain State, agreements are often not clearly attached to a certain location. Particularly today, where long distance communication is a respected means of exchange also in mediation and similar processes, it can indeed be difficult to determine the “State of origin” of an agreement.

~~153~~.164. In practice, it will often be the circumstances of the individual case that determine where the parties to a cross-border dispute can meet to discuss an agreed solution. Sometimes, health problems, visa issues, or in international abduction cases, criminal charges for child abduction, may prevent a party from travelling to another country.

~~154~~.165. In most cases, the question where the parties will actually meet to discuss the amicable solution will not be of importance for the process of rendering the agreement binding and enforceable in all legal systems concerned by the agreement. As discussed above, the crucial question is to which State the parties will “take” their agreement to first render it enforceable, i.e. which “starting point” legal system is chosen with a view to giving the agreement the widest possible effect in other legal systems in accordance with available private international law rules. However, in some cases agreements accompanied by a specific process such as certified mediation may have a privileged standing in certain States.<sup>116</sup> Should the ideal “starting point” legal system grant such a privilege, it is worth considering using this privileged process to elaborate the terms of the agreement, provided of course that it is a process adequate for the resolution of cross-border family disputes. As has been set forth in the Guide to Good Practice on Mediation, mediation can be a very helpful process assisting in the amicable resolution of cross-border family disputes, however, use should be made of specialist international family mediation.

~~155~~.166. Furthermore, certain requirements imposed by the private international law rules facilitating the recognition and enforceability of the agreement (or its content) abroad may impact the parties’ choice of a place and process to bring about an amicable settlement. For example, the proximity to the place of the child’s presence can be important should an involvement of the child be indicated.

~~156~~.167. One last remark should be made with regard to rules of private international law that may require an agreement to be “made” in a certain State as condition for the recognition and enforcement abroad. For example, Article 30(1) of the 2007 Hague Child Support Convention, states: “A maintenance arrangement made in a Contracting State shall be entitled to recognition and enforcement as a decision under this Chapter provided that it is enforceable as a decision in the State of origin.” The Convention is silent on the question what is to be understood by an agreement “made” in a Contracting State. It will depend on the law of the relevant Contracting State what falls under this category. It is conceivable that an agreement established outside that State and then taken to that State for formalisation with a view to obtaining enforceability there can count as an agreement “made” in that State.

<sup>115</sup> See the good practice promoted in particular by the Guide to Good Practice on Mediation (op. cit. note 8), Chapter 12 and Part C of the Principles for the Establishment of Mediation Structures (op. cit. note 16), Part C.

<sup>116</sup> See, supra, at para. 37.

PLEASE NOTE:

- The legal analysis of applicable rules of private international law will help to identify the ideal “starting point” legal system to first render the agreement legally binding and enforceable with a view to giving the agreement the widest possible effect in other legal systems.
- The discussion of the terms of the agreement does not necessarily have to take place in that “starting point” legal system. However, depending on the law of that legal system and the circumstances of the case, it can be recommendable to make use of certain particular processes offered by this legal system to accompany the amicable settlement of the family dispute.

b) Reflections on the international instruments assisting in making the agreement or its content “travel” across borders

~~157-168.~~ As explained at several instances above, exploring which private international instruments can assist in the individual case in giving the agreement or its content legal effect and rendering it enforceable in all States concerned is a crucial step. Once a “starting point” legal system has been identified and the conditions for the cross-border recognition and enforcement are known, it is recommendable to include in the terms of the agreement any facts that may facilitate the authorities’ assessment that all conditions for cross-border recognition are indeed met. For example, should the respect of direct or indirect rules of international jurisdiction be a condition for cross-border recognition and enforcement, any undisputed facts helping to later clarify that the “starting point” legal system where the agreement was included in a decision had, at that moment in time, indeed, the necessary international jurisdiction. See for the particularities of “habitual residence” in this regard, below.

PLEASE NOTE:

- Once the ideal “starting point” legal system has been identified, the conditions for the cross-border recognition and enforcement of the agreement, or respectively, the content of the agreement must be assessed.
- It is recommendable to include in the terms of the agreement any undisputed facts that may facilitate the authorities’ later assessment that all conditions for cross-border recognition are, indeed, met.

c) Reflections on the connecting factor “habitual residence” used in the 1980, 1996 and 2007 Hague Conventions

~~158-169.~~ In international family disputes concerning children the issue of “habitual residence” regularly plays an important role. First of all, the parents’ disagreement on where their child should habitually reside in the future could be the very source of the dispute. Conflicts surrounding cross-border relocation or international child abduction are classic examples for this category of cases. As connecting factor for international jurisdiction and applicable law, the habitual residence of the child can have an influence on which country’s authorities can be seized and on what basis these authorities will decide.

~~159-170.~~ The determination of the “habitual residence” of the child will, as explained above, be an important step when it comes to identifying the “starting point” legal system to render an agreement in an international family dispute concerning children legally binding and enforceable, in particular, for matters falling within the scope of the 1996 Convention.

~~160-171.~~ All Hague Family Law Conventions use “habitual residence” as a connecting factor but neither of them defines the concept. It is up to the national authorities to determine where a person has his or her place of habitual residence based on the facts of the individual case. The test applied in different States is not necessarily the same.

~~161-172.~~ By way of example, guidance developed concerning the interpretation of a child’s “habitual residence” by the CJEU<sup>117</sup> which is the Court tasked to safeguard uniform interpretation of EU law shall give some insight into the factors that can play a role in the determination of habitual residence: Habitual residence of a child “corresponds to the place which reflects some degree of integration by the child in a social and family environment. To that end, in particular the duration, regularity, conditions and reasons for the stay on the territory of a [...] State and the family's move to that State, the child's nationality, the place and conditions of attendance at school, linguistic knowledge and the family and social relationships of the child in that State must be taken into consideration".<sup>118</sup> "In addition to the physical presence of the child in a [...] State other factors must be chosen which are capable of showing that that presence is not in any way temporary or intermittent"<sup>119</sup> and that "the parents' intention to settle permanently with the child in another [...] State, manifested by certain tangible steps such as the purchase or lease of a residence in the host [...] State, may constitute an indicator of the transfer of the habitual residence".<sup>120</sup> In a case where the habitual residence of a two months old infant was discussed, the CJEU highlighted the importance of considering the factors comprising the social and family environment in the light of the child's age<sup>121</sup> and stated that an "infant necessarily shares the social and family environment of the circle of people on whom he or she is dependent" so that the integration of those persons is to be assessed.<sup>122</sup>

<sup>117</sup> The CJEU has in several decisions set forth very detailed factors that assist in the determination of the “habitual residence” of a child in the context of Art. 8 of the Brussels IIa Regulation. Even though the CJEU’s jurisprudence is only binding with regard to EU law, the guidance given for the determination of habitual residence inside the EU is clearly influencing the national jurisprudence in Europe.

~~162.~~173. ____ When parents draft an agreement to settle their cross-border family dispute there is good reason to fix their understanding of the facts and their wishes concerning the habitual residence of their child in the terms of the agreement. It may be helpful if the agreement equally notes the parents' habitual residence at the time of the drafting of the agreement.

PLEASE NOTE:

- The concept of habitual residence is not defined in the Hague Conventions and may be interpreted in each State in a slightly different way.
- In an agreement settling a cross-border family dispute involving children it is extremely helpful to fix the understanding of the parties with regard to the habitual residence of their child at the moment of the drafting of the agreement. This is particularly important in disputes involving a change of habitual residence of the child.
- It may be helpful if the agreement equally notes the parents' habitual residence at the time of the drafting of the agreement.

DRAFTING EXAMPLES

(1) Agreement on cross-border relocation

"It is undisputed between the parents that the current habitual residence of their child is situated in State A, where both parents are habitually resident. The parents both agree, that mother and child will permanently relocate to State B on ..., i.e., both parents are content with a change of habitual residence of the child as a result of the agreement's implementation in the future."

(2) Agreement on non-return in a cross-border child abduction situation where the child has settled in the new State

"The father, habitually resident in State A, and the mother, habitually resident in State B, agree that their child will not-return to State A but will stay to live in State B as his/ her new home State. Considering the fact that the child has lived in State B for more than 8 months and is attending school since ... and taking into consideration that the child is well integrated into the social and family environment in State B attending the local sports club and having close links to the maternal family, the parents acknowledge that the child has settled in State B. The parents are content with a change of habitual residence of the child to State B."

d) Reflections on the applicable substantive law(s)

~~163.~~174. ____ Once the "starting point" legal system for rendering the agreement legally binding and enforceable is found, possible restrictions to party autonomy imposed by the law applicable in that legal system should be explored. In international family law cases the law applicable is determined in accordance with the rules of private international law. Should the 2007 Hague Protocol be in force in the State concerned, the law applicable to matters of maintenance would be,

<sup>118</sup> Judgment of the 2 April 2009, C-523/07, EU:C:2009:225, para. 44.

<sup>119</sup> Ibid., para. 38.

<sup>120</sup> Ibid., para. 40.

<sup>121</sup> Judgment of the 22 December 2010, Barbara Mercredi v. Richard Chaffe, C-497/10 PPU, EU:C:2010:829, para. 53.

<sup>122</sup> Ibid., para. 55.

as a general rule, the law of the State of habitual residence of the creditor.<sup>123</sup> Should the 1996 Convention be in force in the State concerned, the authorities having jurisdiction under the Convention, will apply, as a general rule, their own law to matters of parental responsibility and other matters covered by the Convention.<sup>124</sup> Depending on the subject matters dealt with by the agreement, different laws might be relevant for different parts of the agreement.

~~164.~~<sup>175.</sup> Furthermore, the limits imposed by the public policy test of the foreign State in which recognition and enforcement is then sought should be known.

PLEASE NOTE:

- Restrictions imposed by the law applicable to the subject matter in the legal system where the agreement shall first be rendered legally binding and enforceable should be known.
- Limits imposed by the public policy test of the other State(s) in which enforceability is later sought with the help of private international law rules should be known.

e) Reflections on the hearing of the child and consideration of the child's best interests

~~165.~~<sup>176.</sup> Hearing the voice of the child and considerations of the best interest of the child can play an important role when it comes to rendering an agreement made in the area of family law involving children legally binding and enforceable in all legal systems concerned.

~~166.~~<sup>177.</sup> The fundamental principle that the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration in all proceedings concerning children as enshrined by Article 3 of the CRC is today deeply rooted in national and international family law.<sup>125</sup> The same is true for the right of the child to express his / her views in all matters concerning the child and to have these views taken into consideration in accordance with the age and maturity of the child, Article 12 CRC.

~~167.~~<sup>178.</sup> The involvement of the child might already be proposed in mediation<sup>126</sup> or a similar process to bring about an amicable resolution of the dispute. Alternatively, the court in the "starting point" legal system might, when first rendering the agreement binding and enforceable, in the course of the child's best interests' assessment give the child an opportunity to express his/ her views. Having regard to the cognitive and development needs of children the assistance of psychological experts is invaluable in this regard.

~~168.~~<sup>179.</sup> As noted above, the question of whether a child of sufficient age and maturity was given an opportunity to be heard can be decisive in the context of making the agreement "travel" cross-border with the help of relevant rules of private international law. See, for example, Article 23(2)(b) of the 1996 Convention providing that a measure of child protection may be refused "if the measure was taken, except in a case of urgency, in the context of a judicial or administrative proceeding, without the child having been provided the opportunity to be heard, in violation of fundamental principles of procedure of the requested State".<sup>127</sup>

~~169.~~<sup>180.</sup> In this context, it must be noted, that national standards and practice with regard to hearing the child differ from country to country and that these national differences can sometimes pose additional difficulties in the cross-border recognition of decisions in matters of parental responsibility.<sup>128</sup> The trend in contested cases is correctly for decision makers to ensure that a

<sup>123</sup> See Art. 3 of the 2007 Hague Protocol; see Arts 4 et seq. for exceptions to this general rule.

<sup>124</sup> See Art. 15 of the 1996 Convention.

<sup>125</sup> See also the important work undertaken by the Committee on the Rights of the Child in monitoring the implementation of Art. 3(1): "General comment No 14 (2013)" (op. cit. note 12).

<sup>126</sup> It should be noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child stated in its 2009 General Comment regarding the effective implementation of the right of the child to be heard under Art. 12 of the CRC that the right "to be heard in any judicial and administrative proceedings affecting the child" also needed to be respected where those proceedings "involve alternative dispute [resolution] mechanisms such as mediation and arbitration", see "General Comment No 12 (2009) – The right of the child to be heard", drawn up by the Committee on the Rights of the Child, at paras 32, 51 and 59, available at the following address < <http://www2.ohchr.org/english/bodies/crc/docs/AdvanceVersions/CRC-C-GC-12.pdf> > (last consulted on 13 July 2017).

<sup>127</sup> Such a provision is also contained in the Brussels IIa Regulation, see Art. 23 b) of the Regulation.

<sup>128</sup> The discussions on a recast of the Brussels IIa Regulation in the EU have revealed, that the differences in national law can in practice lead to "discrepancies in the interpretation" of the ground for non-recognition in Art. 23 b) of the Regulation, see European Commission, "Proposal for a Council Regulation on jurisdiction, the recognition and enforcement of decisions in matrimonial matters and the matters of parental responsibility, and on international child child's views are heard directly or indirectly but it is worth remembering Lagarde's point in the Explanatory Report to the 1996 Convention (quoted at paragraph 117 above), that it may not always be in the best interests of the child for the child to have to give an opinion to a decision maker where the parents are in agreement as to what to do.

PLEASE NOTE:

- An agreement that is drawn up giving due consideration to the views of the child should best include language to reflect this consideration.
- In rare cases where the parents have for good reasons reached an agreement affecting a child without consulting that child an explanation is recommended to justify this lack of consultation. Parents need to be aware that their reasons might not be found acceptable by the decision maker and that in the end the child might be heard before the agreement can be given the force of law.

f) Reflections concerning agreements that can only partially obtain legal effect in the States concerned

~~170.~~<sup>181.</sup> In cases where it is expected that rendering all parts of the agreement legally binding and enforceable in all States concerned will be difficult, or where this result may not be obtained at once, the matter should be addressed by the parties. It may be recommendable to include the parties understanding of the interdependence of certain parts of the agreement in order to know how they wish to deal with the partial validity of the agreement.

---

abduction (recast)", COM(2016) 411 final, 30.6.2016, available at the following address: < <https://ec.europa.eu/transparency/regdoc/rep/1/2016/EN/1-2016-411-EN-F1-1.PDF> >, p. 4 (last consulted on 13 July 2017).

